Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet, are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthnot.

FUND, fûnd. n. s. [fond, French; fundo, a bag, Latin.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expense is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the wat'ry tide. Dryd.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Addison.

FU'NDAMENT, fûn'dâ-mênt. n. s. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.

FUNDAME'NTAL, fûn-dâ-mên'tâl. adj. [fundamentalis, Latin, from fundament.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of 't. Shaks.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life.
Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill.
Prior.

Yet some there were among the sounder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,

FUNDAME'NTAL, fûn-dâ-mên'tâl. n. s. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.

We propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnable in respect of superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAME'NTALLY, fûn-dâ-mên'tâl-è. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspectively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people.
Swift.

FU'NERAL, fû'nêr-âl.[88] n. s. [funus, Lat. funerailles, French.]

1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest,
Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral. Shakspeare.

All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral. Shaks.

He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac.

No widow at his funeral shall weep. Sandys

2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long fun'rals blacken all the way. Pope.

You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift.

Not arm'd with horns of arbitrary might,
Or claws to seize their furry spoils in fight. Dryden.

Fu'rther, fûr'thûr.[98] adj. [from forth, not from far, as is commonly imagined; forth, further, furthest, corrupted from forther, forthest, forðer, Saxon. Forther is used by sir Thomas Moore. See Forth and Farther, of which the examples are to be referred to in this word.]

1. At a greater distance.

2. Beyond this.

What further need have we of witnesses. Matt.

Satan had journey'd on, pensive and slow:
But further way found none, so thick intwin'd,
As one continu'd break, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast that pass'd that way. Milton.

Their earnest eyes they fix'd, imagining
For one forbidden tree a multitude
Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame. Milton.

I may meet
Some wand'ring spirit, from him to draw
What further would be learn'd. Milton.

3. Further has in some sort the force of a substantive in the phrase no further, for nothing further.

Let this appease
Thy doubt, since human reach no further knows. Milton.

Fu'rther, fûr'thûr. adv. [from forth.] To a greater distance.

And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place. Numbers.

1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

2. A firelock [from fusil, French]; a small neat musket. This is more properly written fusil.

3. FUSEE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds. Harris.

4. Track of a buck. Ainsworth.

FU'SIBLE, fû'zè-bl.[439] adj. [from fuse.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with, or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.

FUSIBI'LITY, fû-sè-bîl'ê-tè. n. s. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use. Wotton.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

FU'SIL, fû'zil. adj. [fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

Some, less skilful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothic buildings in England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepared; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought
Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Par. Lost.

Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Philips.

FU'SIL, fû-zèè'. n. s. [fusil, French.]

1. A firelock; a small neat musket.

2. [In heraldry; from fusus, Latin.] Something like a spindle.

Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle: in the ancient coat of Montague, argent three fusils in fesse gules. Peacham on Blazoning.

FU'SILIER, fû-zil-lèèr'.[275] n. s. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil; a musketeer.

FU'SION, fû'zhûn.[451] n. s. [fusio, Latin; fusion, French.]

1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newton's Opticks.

FUSS, fûs. n. s. [A low cant word.] A tumult; a bustle.

End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senates keep a fuss:
I submit, and answer thus. Swift.

FUST, fûst. n. s. [fuste, French.]

1. The trunk or body of a column.

2. [from fuste, French.] A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel.

To FUST, fûst. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.

FU'STIAN, fûs'tshân.[291] n. s. [futaine, French; from fuste, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the servingmen in their new fustian and their white stockings? Shakspeare.

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian. Hudibras.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes? In general I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn. Dryden.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden.

Chance thoughts, when governed by the close,
Oft rise to fustian, or descend to prose. Smith.

FU'STIAN, fûs'tshân. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Made of fustian.

2 Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid; used of style.

When men argue, th' greatest part
O' the contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument. Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylvæ, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FU'STIC, fûs'tîk. n. s. A sort of wood brought from the West Indies, used in dying of cloth. Dict.

To FU'STIGATE, fûs'tè-gâte. v. a. [fustigo, Latin.] To beat with a stick; to cane. Dict.

FUSTILA'RIAN, fûs-tè-lâ'rè-ân. n. s. [from fusty.] A low fellow; a stinkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakspeare only.

FU'STINESS, fûs'tè-nês. n. s. [from fusty.] Mouldiness; stink.

FU'STY, fûs'tè. adj. [from fust.] Ill-smelling; mouldy.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains; he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shakspeare.

The fusty plebeians hate thine honours. Shaks.

The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shaksp.

FU'TILE, fû'til.[140] adj. [futile, Fr. futilis, Latin.]

1. Talkative; loquacious.

One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

FUTI'LITY, fû-tîl'ê-tè. n. s. [futilité, French; from futile.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour. L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects. Bentley.

FU'TTOCKS, fût'tûks. n. s. [corrupted from foot hooks. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FU'TURE, fû'tshûre.[461] adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.

Glory they sung to the most High! good will
To future men, and in their dwellings peace. Milton.

He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And flings the future people from his hand. Addison's Ovid.

FU'TURE, fû'tshûre. n. s. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ign'rant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shaksp. Macb.

The mind once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

FU'TURELY, fû'tshûre-lè. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's aforeknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.

FUTURI'TION, fû-tshû-rîsh'ûn. n. s. [from future.] The state of being to be; the condition of being to come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? South.

FUTU'RITY, fû-tû'rè-tè. n. s. [from future.]

1. Time to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shaksp. Othello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.

This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Thou skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope.

3. The state of being to be; futurition.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate, and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found, but among the platonical ideas. Glanville's Scepsis.

To FUZZ, fûz. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.

FU'ZZBALL, fûz'bâll. n. s. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

FY, fi. interj. [fy, French and Flemish; φεῦ; vah, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay.
Spenser.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakspeare.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him. Shakspeare.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite.
Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaieties. Tatler

G.

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard g, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound g retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft g, resembles that of j, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived; thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before h; as might. The Saxon ȝ, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GA'BARDINE, gâb-âr-dêên'. n. s. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabouts. Shakspeare.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my jewish gabardine. Shaksp

The knight did straight submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he disrob'd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras.

To GA'BBLE, gâb'bl.[405] v. n. [gabbare, Ital. gabberen, Dut.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shaksp.

Flocks of fowl, that when the tempest roar,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shore.
Dryden.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house? Shaksp.

Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudibras.

Such a rout, and such a rabble,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GA'BBLE, gâb'bl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shaksp.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble raises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton.

GA'BBLER, gâb'bl-ûr. n. s. [from gabble.] A prater; a chattering fellow.

GA'BEL, gâ'bêl. n. s. [gabel, Fr. gabello, Italian; ȝaƿel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, and tobacco. Addison.

GA'BION, gâ'bê-ûn.[407] n. s. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

GA'BLE, gâ'bl[405] n. s. [gaval, Welsh; gable, French.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer.

GAD, gâd. n. s. [ȝaƀ, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick, a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon.

2. It seems to be used by Shakspeare for a style or graver. [from ȝaƀ, Saxon, a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words.
Shaksp.

To GAD, gâd. v. n. [derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius, from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterit of the old word aȝaan, to go.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?
—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shaksp.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclus.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream, and shore.
Fairfax.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

Thee, shepherd, thee, the woods and desart caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes moan. Milton.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.
Dryden.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home,
And drives her, gadding, round the world to roam.
Dryden.

There 's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.

GA'DDER, gâd'dûr. n. s. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclus.

GA'DDINGLY, gâd'dîng-lê. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GA'DFLY, gâd'fli. n. s. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon ȝaƀ, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bacon.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a flight
Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd. Thomson.

GAFF, gâf. n. s. A harpoon or large hook. Ainsworth.

GA'FFER, gâf'fûr.[98] n. s. [ȝeferre, companion, Sax.] A word of respect, now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.

For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye,
Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay.

GA'FFLES, gâf'flz.[405] n. s. [ȝafelucar, spears, Saxon.]

1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.
2. A steel lever to bend crossbows. Ainsworth.

To GAG, gâg. v. n. [from gaghel, Dutch, the palate, Minshew.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He 's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd. Shak.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound. Pope.

GAG, gâg. n. s. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,
With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain. Dryden.

Your woman would have run upstairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.

GAGE, gâdje. n. s. [gage, French.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatcht away. Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shaksp.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shaksp.

They from their mothers' breasts poor orphans rend
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern's Oroon.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments that gain its assent, are the vouchers and gage of its probability. Locke.

2. A measure; a rule of measuring.

One judges, as the weather dictates, right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night;
Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles or parentage. Young.

To GAGE, gâdje. v. a. [gager, Fr.]

1. To wager; to depone as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

A moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shaksp.

He found the Turkish merchants making merry: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knolles.

2. To bind by some caution or surety; to engage.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shaksp.

3. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

We shall see your bearing.
—Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shaksp.

To GA'GGLE, gâg'gl.[405] v. n. [gagen, gagelen, Dutch.] To make a noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.

May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.

GA'ILY, gâ'lè. adv. [from gay.]

1. Airily; cheerfully.
2. Splendidly. See GAYLY.

GAIN, gâne.[73] [202] n. s. [gain, Fr.]

1. Profit; advantage: contrary to loss.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general consent. Raleigh.

Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Milton.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains; for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryd.

Folly fights for kings or dives for gain. Pope.

2. Interest; lucrative views.

That, sir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shaksp.

3. Unlawful advantage.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you? 2 Corinthians.

If pride, if envy, if the lust of gain,
If mad ambition in thy bosom reign,
Thou boast'st, alas! thy sober sense in vain. Fitzgerald.

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN, gâne. v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Egypt became a gained ground by the muddy and limeous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land. Brown.

He gains, to live as man,
Higher degree of life. Milton.

What reinforcement we may gain from hope. Milton.

2. To win; not to lose.

A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king. Milton.

3. To have the overplus in comparative computation.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that. Burnet.

4. To obtain; to procure; to receive.

I acceptance found, which gain'd
This answer from the gracious voice divine. Milt.

That side some small reflection gains
Of glimm'ring air; less vex'd with tempest loud. Milton.

If such a tradition were endeavoured to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive however it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson.

For fame with toil we gain, but lose with ease,
Sure some to vex, but never all to please. Pope.

5. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.

I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me. Daniel.

6. To obtain whatever, good or bad.

Ye should not have loosed from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Acts

7. To win against opposition.

They who were sent to the other pass, after a short resistance gained it. Clarendon

Fat fees from the defended Umbrian draws,
And only gains the wealthy client's cause. Dryd.

O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope

8. To draw into any interest or party.

Come, with presents laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dryden.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself;
If you gain him, I shall comply of course. A. Philips

9. To obtain as a wooer.

He never shall find out a fit mate, but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake,
Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain
Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse. Milton.

10. To reach; to attain.

The west still glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shaksp.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be tost into the main? Waller.

Sun! sound his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison.

Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Phestan shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars. Pope.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

Nor knows he merchants' gainful care. Dryden.

Maro's muse commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, nor wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels. Philips.

GA'INFULLY, gâne'fûl-ê. adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS, gâne'fûl-nês. n. s. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING, gâne'giv-îng. n. s. ['gainst and give.] The same as misgiving; a giving against: as gainsaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting. Hanmer.

It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gaingiving as would, perhaps trouble a woman. Shak.

GA'INLESS, gâne'lês. adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

GA'INLESSNESS, gâne'lês-nês. n. s. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work: miners, buried in earth and darkness were never the richer for all the ore they digged: no more is the insatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY, gâne'lê. adv. [from gain.] Handily, readily; dexterously. Out of use.

To GA'INSAY, gâne-sâ'. v. a. ['gainst and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gainsay one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much gainsay;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

2. To deny any thing.

I never heard yet
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did
Than to perform it first. Shaksp.

GAINSA'YER, gâne-sâ'ûr. n. s. [from gainsay.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainsayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands. Hooker.

We are for this cause challenged as manifest gainsayers of scripture, even in that which we read for scripture unto the people. Hooker.

It was full of matter of conviction to all gainsayers. Hammond.

Others sought themselves a name by being his gainsayers, but fail'd of their purpose. Fell.

'GAINST, gênst.[206] prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that 'gainst ourselves we bore. Dryden.

To GA'INSTAND, gâne'stând. v. a. ['gainst and stand.] To withstand; to oppose; to resist. A proper word, but not in use.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of revered duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney.

GA'IRISH, gâ'rîsh.[202] adj. [ȝeapplan, to dress fine, Sax.]

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.

Three or four will outrage in apparel, huge hose, monstrous hats, and gairish colours. Ascham.

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was;
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gairish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shaksp.

There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from day's gairish eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Fame and glory transport a man out of himself; it makes the mind loose and gairish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties. South.

GA'IRISHNESS, gâ'rîsh-nês. n. s. [from gairish.]

1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or gairishness of spirit, but sober, grave, and silent. Taylor.

GAIT, gâte. n. s. [gat, Dutch.]

1. A way: as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shak.

2. March; walk.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allurements did forsake. Fairy Queen.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait. Hubberd.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait. Shaksp.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion. Clarendon.

A third, who by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell. Milton.

Leviathans
Wallowing, unwieldly, enormous in their gait. Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait. Milt.

GALA'GE, gâ-lâje'. n. s. A shepherd's clog. Not in use.

My heart-blood is well nigh frorne, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

GALA'NGAL, gâ-lâng'gâl. n. s. [galange, Fr.] A medicinal root.

The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste. Hill.

GALA'XY, gâl'lâk-sê.[517] n. s. [γαλαξία; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleaveland.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky:
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to show what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley.

GA'LBANUM, gâl'bâ-nûm.[503] n. s. A resinous gum.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour; its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant. Hill.

It yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecclus.

GALE, gâle. n. s. [gahling, hasty, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona? Shak.

Winds
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air. Milton.

Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

GA'LEATED, gâ'lê-â-têd.[507] adj. [galeatus, Lat.]

1. Covered as with an helmet.

A galeated eschinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing. Woodward.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling a helmet, as the monkshood.

GALERI'CULATE, gâ-lê-rîk'û-lâte. adj. [from galerus, Lat.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT, gâl'yût. n. s. [galiotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three pattereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Dict.

Barbarossa sent two notable pirates with thirty galiots, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered, and forced again to their galiots. Knolles.

GALL, gâwl. n. s. [ȝeala, Sax. galle, Dut.]

1. The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you muthering ministers? Shaksp.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shaksp.

This position informs us of a vulgar errour, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies. It 's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet savour. Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shaksp.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintest meat they taste!
Shaksp.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.
Dryden.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow! Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [from the verb.]

This is the fatalest wound; as much superiour to the former, as a gangrene to a gall or scratch.
Government of the Tongue.

7. [from galla.]

Galls or gallnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have oriental and European galls: the oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and disagreeable acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg; the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescences which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls though less firm in their texture. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excresences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.

To GALL, gâwl. v. a. [galer, Fr.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shaksp.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.
Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eyes upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shaksp.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galleth them. Hooker.

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall. Shaksp.

All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke. Shak.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the rememberance of it. Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.

Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.
Dryden.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addison.

To GALL, gâwl. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you glecking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shaksp.

GA'LLANT, gâl'lânt. adj. [galant, Fr. from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. Isaiah.

The gay, the wise, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.

2. Brave; high spirited: daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney.

But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth.
Shaksp.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight. Digby.

3. Fine; noble; spacious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle.
Shaksp.

4. Courtly with respect to ladies.

He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress.
Clarendon.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In gallant thought to plume their painted wings.
Thomson.

GA'LLANT, gâl-lânt'. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly; airy, splendid man.

The new proclaimation.
——What is 't for!
—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylors.
Shaksp.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastius. Knolles.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly spright.
Dryden.

Gallants, look to 't, you say there are no sprights;
But I 'll come dance about your beds at nights.
Dryden.

2. A whoremaster, who caresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shaksp.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison.

3. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

GA'LLANTLY, gâl'lânt-lè. adv. [from gallant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.

2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman. Swift.

GA'LLANTRY, gâl'lân-trè. n. s. [galanterie, French.]

1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificience; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.

2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.

The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature. Glanville.

3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day. Shaksp.

4. Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.
Granville.

5. Vitious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins. Swift.

GA'LLEASS, gâl'lè-âs. n. s. [galeas, Fr.] A heavy low built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Dict.

My father hath no less
Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses,
And twelve tight gallies. Shaksp.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses. Addison.

GALLE'ON, gâl-lôôn'. n. s. [galion, Fr.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidado, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk, or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles. Bacon.

GA'LLERY, gâl'lûr-è.[557] n. s. [galerie, Fr. derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant harbors, that one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow.
Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,

And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Spenser.

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shaksp.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas. Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Nor to the foe yet known. Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Graunt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope.

GA'LLETYLE, gâl'lê-tîl. n. s. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galletyle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass. Bacon.

GA'LLEY, gâl'lê. n. s. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλεωτης, the swordfish; as others from galleon, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, galleon, galliot.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, gallies, barks, and brigantines. Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of gallies, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean. Bacon.

Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Less in an open boat or kind of galley. Raleigh.

On oozy ground his gallies moor,
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person where he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befal him: he would fly to the mines and the gallies for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. South.

GA'LLEY-SLAVE, gâl'lê-slâve. n. s. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the gallies.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor men, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy. Bramhall.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission. Decay of Piety.

The surges gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar. Garth.

GA'LLIARD, gâl'yârd. n. s. [gaillard, Fr. imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius; and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself. Cleaveland.

2. An active, nimble, sprightly dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard. Shaksp.

There's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there. Shaksp.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians used to do with those that dance too long galliards. Bacon.

The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the medley of once dance. Bacon.

GA'ILLARDISE, gâl'yâr-dize. n. s. [Fr.] Meriment; exuberant gayety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius; I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and gaillardise of company. Brown.

GA'LLICISM, gâl'lê-sîzm. n. s. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Felton.

GA'LLIGASKINS, gâl'lê-gâs'kîns. n. s. [Caligæ Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chasm disclose. Philips.

GALLIMA'TIA, gâl-lê-mâ'shâ. n. s. [galimathias, Fr.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAU'FRY, gâl-lê-mâw'frê. n. s. [galimafre, Fr.]

1. A hotch-potch, or hash of several sorts of broken meat; a medley. Hanmer.

They have made of our English tongue a gallimaufry or hodge-podge of all other speeches. Spenser.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley.

They have a dance, which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in 't. Shakspeare.

The painter, who under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufry of his work. Dryden.

3. It is used by Shakspeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.
—Why, sir, my wife is not young.
—He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor;
He loves thy gallimaufry, friend. Shakspeare.

GA'LLIOT, gâl'yût. n. s. [galiotte, Fr.] A small swift galley.

Barbarossa departing out of Hellespontus with eighty gallies and certain galliots, shaped his course towards Italy. Knolles' History.

GA'LLIPOT, gâl'lê-pôt. n. s. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner. The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outsides apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs. Bacon.

Here phials in nice discipline are set:
There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet. Garth.

Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spect.

Thou that dost Æsculapius deride,
And o'er his gallipots in triumph ride. Fenton.

GA'LLON, gâl'lûn. n. s. [gelo, low Latin.] A liquid measure of four quarts.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopped. Wiseman.

GALLO'ON, gâl-lôôn'. n. s. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GA'LLOP, gâl'lûp. v. n. [galoper, French.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Budæus, from καλπάζειν; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was 't come by? Shakspeare's Macbeth.

His steeds will be restrain'd,
But gallop lively down the western hill. Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain,
His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryd.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney.

They 'gan espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seemed from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Queen.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end, than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Shaks.

Whom doth time gallop withal?
—With a thief to the gallows. Shakspeare.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GA'LLOP, gâl'lûp. n. s. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forward, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once. Farrier's Dict.

GA'LLOPER, gâl'lûp-ûr. n. s. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

To GA'LLOW, gâl'lô. v. a. [agælpan, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies
Gallow the very wand'rers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakspeare.

GA'LLOWAY, gâl'lô-wâ. n. s. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the north; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

GA'LLOWGLASSES, gâl'lô-glâs-ês. n. s.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footmen that now weareth a corslet, before the corslet was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hanmer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.
A puissant and mighty pow'r
Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp.

GA'LLOW, gâl'lûs. } n. s. [It is used by
GA'LLOWS, } some in the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galgo, Goth. ȝealȝa, Sax. galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabulus furca, Latin; others from גבה high, others from gallu, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from aȝælpan, the gallows being the great object of legal terrour.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.
This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.
I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowses. Shakspeare.
I prophesied if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Shakspeare.
He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.
A poor fellow going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity. Shakspeare.
What arms to use, or nets to frame,
Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,
With all the myst'ries of that game. Waller.
Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game, spied a company of bustards and cranes. L'Est.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.
Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse,
Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton.
There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow. Dryd.
A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chace. Arbuthnot.
Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chace the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game. Prior.
Proud Nimrod first the bloody chace began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.
Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game. Young.

9. Solemn contests, exhibited as spectacles to the people.

GA'MESOMELY, gâme'sûm-lê. adv. [from gamesome.] Merrily.

GA'MESTER, gâme'stûr. n. s. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shaks.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate. Dryden.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves. Addison.

All the superfluous whims elate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior. Law.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamester is the soonest winner. Shaks.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business strait. Bacon.

3. A merry frolicksome person.

You're a merry gamester,
My lord Sands. Shakspeare.

4. A prostitute. Not in use.

She 's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamester to the camp. Shaks.

GA'MMER, gâm'mûr. n. s. [of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer: as, Gammer Gurton's Needle. An old play.

GA'MMON, gâm'mûn.[166] n. s. [gambone, Italian.]

1. The buttock of a hog salted and dried; the lower end of the flitch.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold;
A rusty gammon of some sev'n years old. Dryd.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second stinks. Dryd.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gammon. Thomson.

GA'MUT, gâm'ût. n. s. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shaks.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake,
By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:
Things simply good can never be unfit. Donne.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

'GAN, gân. for began, from 'gin for begin.

The noble knight 'gan feel
His vital force to faint. Spenser.

To GANCH, gânsh. v. a. [ganciere, from ganchio, a hook, Italian; ganche, Fr.] To drop from a high place upon hooks, by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Pocockius.

To GA'NGRENATE, gâng'grè-nâte. v. a. [from gangrene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction. Brown.

GA'NGRENE, gâng'grène.[408] n. s. [gangrene, French; gangræna, Latin.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation, followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates. Bacon.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,
By cutting hope, like a lopt limb, away. Waller.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wiseman.

If the substance of the soul is festered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: the inflammation will rage to all eternity. Addison.

To GAN'GRENE, gâng'grène. v. a. [gangrener, Fr. from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently, for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay. Dryd.

To GA'NGRENE, gâng'grène. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out. Wiseman.

GA'NGRENOUS, gâng'grè-nûs. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

And favour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras.

GAOL, jâle.[212] n. s. [geol, Welsh; geole, French.] A prison, a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol. Shakspeare.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakspeare.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakspeare.

To GAOL, jâle. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison; to commit to gaol.

Gaoling vagabonds were chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example. Bacon.

GA'OLDELIVERY, jâle'dè-lîv'ûr-è. n. s. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to all,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth or gaoldelivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaoldelivery of souls, not for punishment. South.

GA'OLER, jâle'ûr. n. s. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steeled gaoler is the friend of men. Shaksp.

I know not how or why my surly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r,
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes,
Put off the brute. Dryden.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and immured, 'till the death of her gaoler. Tatler.

GAP, gâp. n. s. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tusser.

With terrours and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n: which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton.

Bushes are most lasting of any for dead hedges or to mend gaps. Mortimer.

I sought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it. Rogers.

2. A breach.

The loss of that city concerned the christian commonweal: manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with the spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stopt. Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shakspeare.

Nor is it any botch or gap in the works of nature. More.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part
Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were discover'd. Shakspeare.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakspeare.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a GAP. To escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quicksets will grow.

His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps. Swift.

9. To stand in the GAP. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this! Who would stand in the gap? Lesley.

GAP-TOOTHED, gâp'tôôth.[359] adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad-speaking gaptoothed wife of Bath. Dryden.

To GAPE, gâp'[75 92 241] v. a. [ȝeapan, Saxon.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shaksp.

Gaping, or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbuthnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,
Whose mother 's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away:
And at each leaf that flies, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find.
Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train.
Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave: with for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.
Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave!
And thou, who gap'st for my estate, draw near,
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden.

4. With after.

What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments? L'Estrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopped in the church-yard. South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person,
I 'll speak to it though hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace. Shakspeare.

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father.
Shakspeare.

The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.

That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbuthnot.

8. To open: to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cæsura in this poem. Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my muse can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Roscommon.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape t' anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foresee
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras.

11. To stare with wonder.

Parts of different species jumbled together according to the mad imagination of the dawber; and the end of all this to cause laughter; a very monster in a Bartholemew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden.

Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjur'd head is bow'd,
Betimes retreat. Gay.

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth. Job.

3. One who longs or craves.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carew.

GAR, gâr.[77] in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadger is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson.

To GAR, gâr. v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. Obsolete. It is still used in Scotland.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs ytorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorne. Spenser

GARB, gârb. n. s. [garbe, French.]

1. Dress; clothes; habit.

Thus Belial, with words cloath'd in reason's garb,
Counsel'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth. Milton

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of dress.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths did wear. Denham.

3. Exteriour appearance.

This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakspeare.

GA'RBAGE, gâr'bîdje.[90] n. s. [garbear, Spanish. This etymology is very doubtful.] The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb,
Longs after for the garbage. Shakspeare.

Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakspeare.

A flame more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old aruspicy and aug'ry,
That out of garbages of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras.

Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd?
Roscommon.

When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage. Dryden.

GA'RDEN, gâr'd'n.[92 103] n. s. [gardd, Welsh; jardin, French; giardino, Italian.]

1. A piece of ground enclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shakspeare.

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there. Shak.

In the royal ordering of gardens there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year. Bacon.

In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade, and water. Temple.

My garden takes up half my daily care,
And my field asks the minutes I can spare. Harte.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy. Shakspeare.

3. GARDEN is often used in composition for hortensis, or belonging to a garden.

4. Garden-mould. Mould fit for a garden.

They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay. Mortimer.

5. Garden-tillage. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden-tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer.

6. Garden-ware. The produce of gardens.

A clay bottom is a much more precious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer.

To GA'RDEN, går'd'n. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden; to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. Ben Jonson.

When ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. Bacon.

GA'RDENER, går'd'n-ůr. n. s. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to which our wills are gardeners; so that if we plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Shakspeare.

Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips. Bacon.

The gardener may lop religion as he pleases. Howel.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions. Evelyn.

Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear. Dryden.

GA'RDENING, går'd'n-ing. n. s. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

GARE, gåre. n. s. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep.

GA'RGARISM, går'gå-rizm. n. s. [γαργαρισμες; gargarisme, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with. Quincy.

Apophlegmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon.

To GARGARI'ZE, går'gå-rize. v. a. [γαργαρίζω; gargariser, French.] To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit. Bacon.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize. Holder.

GA'RGET, går'gît. n. s. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts. Mortimer.

To GA'RGLE, går'gl.[405] v. a. [gargouiller, French; gargogliare, Italian; gurgel, German, the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxycrate. Harvey.

The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stopt by gargling with oxycrate. Wiseman.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats. Dryden.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song. Waller.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat
On nonsense gargl'd in an enunch's throat. Fenton.

GA'RGLE, går'gl. n. s. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure. Wiseman.

GA'RGLION, gårg'lê-ůn. n. s. An exsudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immoveable tumour. Quincy.

GA'RGOL, går'gôl. n. s. A distemper in hogs.

The signs of the gargol in hogs are hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.

GA'RLAND, går'lånd. n. s. [garlande, guirland, French.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whitsuntide to bear. Sidney.

A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.
—How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?
—Ay, my good lord. Shakspeare.

Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryd.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she had left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakspeare.

GA'RLICK, går'lik. n. s. [ȝaɼ, Saxon, a lance; and leek, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Allium, Latin.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is extremely active as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred power:
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate.

GA'RLICK Pear-tree, går'lik. n. s.

This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick. Miller.

GA'RLICK, Wild, går'lik. n. s. A plant.

GARLICKEA'TER, går'lik-ê-tůr. n. s. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much
Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlickeaters. Shaksp.

GA'RMENT, gå'rmênt. n. s. [guarniment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; clothes; dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shaksp.

Our leaf once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers. Raleigh.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?
Would'st thou, a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear. Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed. Addison.

Let him that sues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontesting sufferance of such small losses. Kettlewell.

GA'RNER, går'nůr. n. s. [grenier, Fr.] A place in which thrashed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and foyson plenty,
Barns and garners never empty. Shaksp.

For sundry foes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd.

To GA'RNER, går'nůr. v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in garners.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shaksp.

GA'RNET, går'nêt. n. s. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients; the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple. Woodward.

To GA'RNISH, går'nish. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees. Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnished,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,
Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew. Spenser.

With taper light

To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shaksp.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnished with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste. Raleigh.

All the streets were garnished with the citizens, standing in their liveries. Bacon.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly drest!
Garnish'd with 'sparagus, himself a feast! Dryd.

No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitchcock'd eel.
King's Cookery.

3. To fit with fetters. A cant term.

GA'RNISH, går'nĭsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweet,
Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy. Shaksp.

Matter and figure they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;
They seek to feed and please their guests. Prior.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters. A cant term.

4. Pensiuncula carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol. Ainsworth.

GA'RNISHMENT, går'nish-mĕnt. n. s. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Sancta Guistiniana in Padoua is a sound piece of good art, where the materials being ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, ravish the beholders. Wotton.

GA'RNITURE, går'nē-tûre. n. s. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferiour in furniture of their heads. Gov. of the Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your sires an age ago,
Is lost, without the garniture of show. Granville.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison

GA'ROUS, gā'rûs. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and olidous separation. Broome.

GA'RRAN, går'rûn.[81] n. s. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A highland horse, which, when brought into the north of England, takes the name of galloway.

When he comes forth, he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

Every man would be forced to provide winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease. Temple.

GA'RRET, går'rĕt.[81] n. s. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob commission'd by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dryden.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbuthnot.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade,
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:
And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

GARRETE'ER, går-rĕt-tēēr. n. s. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GA'RRISON, går'rē-s'n.[170] n. s. [garnison, French.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,
Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison. Sidney.

2. A fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind. Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies. Spenser.

To GA'RRISON, går'rē-s'n. v. a. [from the noun.] To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,
Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine.
Dryden.

GARRU'LITY, går-rû'lē-tē. n. s. [garrulitas, Lat.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

Let me here
Expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity. Milton.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all, loquacity or garrulity. Ray.

GA'RRULOUS, går'rû-lûs. adj. [garrulus, Lat.] Prattling; talkative.

Old age looks out,
And garrulous recounts the feats of youth. Thomson.

GA'RTER, går'tûr.[98] n. s. [gardus, Welsh; jartier, Fr. from gar, Welsh, the binding of the knee.]

1. A string or riband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shaksp.

When we rest in our cloaths we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage. Ray.

Handsome garters at your knees. Swift.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves. Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.
—The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;
The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.
Shaksp.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race. Dryden.

3. The principal king at arms.

To GA'RTER, går'tûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose. Shaksp

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place. Wiseman

GARTH, gårth. n. s. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS, gās. n. s. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses. Harris.

GASCONA'DE, gās-kō-nāde'. n. s. [Fr. from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.

To GASCONA'DE, gās-kō-nāde'. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH, gāsh. v. a. [from hacher, to cut, French. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Hayward.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it, but to carve a beautiful image requires art. Tillotson.

See me gash'd with knives,
Or sear'd with burning steel. Rowe.

Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,
He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell.
A. Philips.

GASH, gāsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his targe,
That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would discharge.
Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off. Shaksp.

Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the list; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectrous humour issuing flow'd.
Milton.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar. Arbuthnot.

GA'SKINS, gās'kĭnz. n. s. [from Gascoigne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;
Or if both break, your gaskins fall. Shaksp.

To GASP, gāsp. v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from grispe, Dan. to sob, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath with labour.

The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryd.

They raised a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats.
Dryden.

The gasping head flies off; a purple flood
Flows from the trunk. Dryden.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire.
Dryden.

A scantling of wit lay gasping for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden.

The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and gasping for breath. Brown's Travels.

Pale and faint,
He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends. Addison.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;

The wolves will get a breakfast by my death. Dryden.

He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he gasps away his breath. Dryden.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by gasping.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and gasped after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. Spectator.

GASP, gåsp. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is at last gasp. Shaksp.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breathed his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shaksp.

If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison.

To GAST, gåst. v. a. [from ȝæꝛt, Saxon; See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shaksp.

GA'STRICK, gås'trik. adj. [from γαστηρ.] Belonging to the belly.

GASTRO'RAPHY, gås-trôr'å-fè. n. s. [γαστηρ and ῥάπτω.] In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestines. Sharp.

GASTRO'TOMY, gås-trôt'ò-mè.[518] n. s. [γαστηρ and τέτροκα.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT, gåt. The preterit of get.

Moses gat him up into the mount. Exodus.

GATE, gåte. n. s. [ȝeat, Sax.]

1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee. Shaksp.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbands on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shaksp.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into enclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?
——Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shaksp.

3. An avenue; an opening.

Auria had done nothing but wisely and politickly, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Knolles.

GA'TEVEIN, gåte'vàne. n. s. The vena porta.

Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood. Bacon.

GA'TEWAY, gåte'wà. n. s. [gate and way.] A way through gates of enclosed grounds.

Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another. Mortimer.

To GA'THER, gåтн'ûr. v. a. [ȝaðeꝛan, Saxon.]

1. To collect; to bring into one place.

Gather stones—and they took stones and made an heap. Genesis.

2. To get in harvest.

The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Leviticus.

3. To pick up; to glean.

His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges. Shaksp.

I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer. Wotton.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.

What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden.

5. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.

6. To heap up; to accumulate.

He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Proverbs

7. To select and take.

Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Psalms.

8. To sweep together.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. Matthew.

9. To collect charitable contributions.

10. To bring into one body or interest.

I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Isaiah.

11. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.

Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne;
Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand. Pope.

12. To gain.

He gathers ground upon her in the chace;
Now breathes upon her hair with nearer pace. Dryden.

13. To pucker needlework.

14. To collect logically; to know by inference.

That which, out of the law of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law. Hooker.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is the mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shaksp.

After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.

From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the stoicks of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined, Perkins.

Return'd,
By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint,
Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton.

Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is translating Chaucer into French: from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provencal. Dryden.

15. To GATHER Breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

To GA'THER, gåтн'ûr. v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear. Dryd.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh my boys! he cries. Dryden.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, east, and west, on airy coursers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.

Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came into them. Bacon.

3. To assemble.

There be three things that mine heart feareth; the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclus.

4. To generate pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.

GA'THER, gåтн'ûr.[98] n. s. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches and the gathers,
Part cannons, perriwigs, and feathers. Hudibras.

GA'THERER, gåтн'ûr-ûr. n. s. [from gather.]

1. One who gathers; one that collects; a collector.

I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff. Wotton.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.

I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos.

Nor in that land
Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. May's Virgil.

GA'THERING, gåтн'ûr-îng. n. s. [from gather.] Collection of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Corinthians.

GA'TTEN-TREE, gåt'tn-trêê. n. s. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUDE, gàwd. n. s. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of ἀγαν☉; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gwawdio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy;

the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy. It is not now much used.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shaksp.

The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. Shaksp.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shaksp.

Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gaudes the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finest holland bear. Dryden.

To GAUDE, gâwd. v. n. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaude with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shaksp.

GA'UDERY, gâw'dêr-ê. n. s. [from gaude.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth with cloathes as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaud'ry known.
Dryden.

GA'UDILY, gâw'dê-lê. adv. [from gaude.] Showily.

GA'UDINESS, gâw'dê-nês. n. s. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

GA'UDY, gâw'dê.[213] adj. [from gaude.] Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shaksp.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sun-beams.
Milton.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side.
Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Law.

GA'UDY, gâw'dê. n. s. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE, gâve. The preterit of give.

Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;
If thou can'st give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Lovers' riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it.
Donne.

GA'VEL, gâv'îl. n. s. A provincial word for ground.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mortimer.

GA'VELKIND, gâv'îl-kind. n. s. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places in England, but especially in Kent.
Cowell.

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind.
Davies.

To GAUGE, gâdje.[217] v. a. [gauge, jauge, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written, gage.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.
2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird.
Derham.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope.

GAUGE, gâdje. n. s. [from the verb.] A measure, a standard.

This plate must be a gage to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Moxon.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gage of your trade and wealth. Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured.
Arbuthnot.

GAU'GER, gâ'jûr. n. s. [from gauge.] One whose business it is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator.
Carew.

GAUNT, gânt.[214] adj. [As if gewant, from ȝepanian, to lessen, Sax.] Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens' looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.
Shaksp.

Two mastiffs, gaunt and grim, her flight pursu'd
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embru'd.
Dryden.

GA'UNTLY, gânt'lê. adv. [from gaunt. Leanly; slenderly; meagerly.

GA'UNTLET, gânt'lêt. n. s. [gantelet, Fr.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shaksp.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough,
This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleaveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryden.

Who naked wrestled best, besmear'd with oil;
Who with gauntlets gave or took the foil. Dryden.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light;
View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were used to war. Prior.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;
He throws the gauntlet Otway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field.
Southern.

GA'VOT, gâ-vôt'. n. s. [gavotte, Fr.] A kind of dance.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world:
If so, gaze on. Shaksp.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairfax.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Ecclus.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shaksp.

High stations tumults, but not bliss create;
None think the great unhappy, but the great.
Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,
Which makes a swain as wretched as a king. Young.

To GAZE, gȧze. v. a. To view steadfastly.

Strait toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd awhile the ample sky. Milton.

GAZE, gȧze. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the worldis gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of musick touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shaksp.

Not a month
'Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now. Shaksp.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd Worlds. Milton.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understanding, soars out of sight, and leaves his readers at a gaze. Dryden.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton.

GA'ZEL, gȧze'ĕl. n. s. An Arabian deer.

GA'ZER, gȧ'zŭr. n. s. [from gaze.] He that gazes; one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermil red did shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;
The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed.
Fairy Queen.

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk. Shaksp.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed. Watts.

GA'ZEFUL, gȧze'fŭl. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravisht hearts of gazeful men might rear
To admiration of that heavenly light. Spenser.

I've been bold,
For that I knew it the most general way. Shaksp.

10. General is appended to several offices; as, Attorney General, Solicitor General, Vicar General.

GE'NERAL, jĕn'ĕr-âl. n. s.

1. The whole; the totality; the main; without insisting on particulars.

That which makes an action fit to be commanded or forbidden, can be nothing else, in general, but its tendency to promote or hinder the attainment of some end. Norris.

In particulars our knowledge begins and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.

I have considered Milton's Paradise Lost in the fable, the characters, the sentiments, and the language: and have shewn that he excels, in general, under each of these heads. Addison.

An history painter paints man in general; a portrait painter, a particular man, and consequently a defective model. Reynolds.

2. The publick; the interest of the whole. Not in use.

Neither my place, nor aught I heard of business,
Hath raised me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Ingluts and swallows other sorrows. Shaksp.

3. The vulgar. Not in use.

The play, I remember, pleased not the million; 'twas caviare to the general: but it was, as I received it, and others, whose judgment in such matters cried in the top of mine, an excellent play.
Shaksp.

4. [general, French.] One that has the command over an army.

A general is one that hath power to command an army. Locke.

The generals on the enemy's side are inferiour to several that once commanded the French armies. Addison.

The war's whole art each private soldier knows,
And with a gen'ral's love of conquest glows. Addison.

GENERALI'SSIMO, jĕn-ĕr-ăl-ĭs'ē-mō. n. s. [generalissme, French, from general.] The supreme commander. It is often rather a title of honour than office.

Commission of generalissimo was likewise given to the prince. Clarendon.

Pompey had deserved the name of great; and Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

GENERA'LITY, jĕn-ĕr-ăl'ē-tē. n. s. [generalite, French; from general.]

1. The state of being general; the quality of including species or particulars.

Because the curiosity of man's wit doth with peril wade farther in the search of things than were convenient, the same is thereby restrained unto such generalities as, every where offering themselves, are apparent to men of the weakest conceit. Hooker.

These certificates do only in the generality mention the parties' contumacies and disobedience. Ayliffe.

2. The main body; the bulk; the common mass.

Necessity, not extending to the generality, but resting upon private heads. Raleigh.

By his own principles he excludes from salvation the generality of his own church; that is, all that do not believe upon his grounds. Tillotson.

The generality of the English have such a favourable opinion of treason, nothing can cure them. Addison.

They publish their ill-natured discoveries with a secret pride, and applaud themselves for the singularity of their judgment, which has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison.

The wisest were distracted with doubts, while the generality wandered without any ruler. Rogers.

GE'NERALLY, jĕn'ĕr-ăl-ē. adv. [from general.]

1. In general; without specification or exact limitation.

I am not a woman to be touched with so many giddy fancies as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal. Shaksp.

Generally we would not have those that read this work of Sylva Sylvarum, account it strange that we have set down particulars untried. Bacon.

2. Extensively, though not universally.

3. Commonly; frequently.

4. In the main; without minute detail; in the whole taken together.

Generally speaking, they live very quietly. Addison.

Generally speaking, they have been gaining ever since, though with frequent interruptions. Swift.

Generally speaking, persons designed for long life, though in their former years they were small eaters, yet find their appetites encrease with their age. Blackmore.

GE'NERALNESS, jĕn'ĕr-ăl-nĕs. n. s. [from general.] Wide extent, though short of universality; frequency; commonness.

They had, with a general consent, rather springing by the generalness of the cause than of any artificial practice, set themselves in arms. Sidney.

GE'NERALTY, jĕn'ĕr-ăl-tē. n. s. [from general.] The whole; the totality.

The municipal laws of this kingdom are of a vast extent, and include in their generalty, all those several laws which are allowed as the rule of justice and judicial proceedings. Hale.

GE'NERANT, jĕn'ĕr-ănt. n. s. [generans, Latin.] The begetting or productive power.

Some believe the soul made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention. Glanville.

In such pretended generations the generant or active principle is supposed to be the sun, which, being an inanimate body, cannot act otherwise than by his heat. Ray.

To GE'NERATE, jĕn'ĕr-āte. v. a. [genero, Lat.]

1. To beget; to propagate.

Those creatures which being wild generate seldom, being tame, generate often. Bacon.

2. To produce to life; to procreate.

GENERA'TION, jĕn-ĕr-ā'shŭn. n. s. [from generate; generation, French.]

1. The act of begetting or producing.

Seals make excellent impressions; and so it may be thought of sounds in their first generation: but then the dilation of them, without any new sealing, shews they cannot be impressions. Bacon.

He longer will delay, to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature from the unapparent deep. Milton.

If we deduce the several races of mankind in the several parts of the world from generation, we must imagine the first numbers of them, who in any place agree upon any civil constitutions, to assemble as so many heads of families whom they represent. Temple.

2. A family; a race.

Y' are a dog.

——Thy mother's of my generation: what 's she, if I be a dog? Shaksp.

3. Progeny; offspring.

And ripens spirits as he ripens mines. Pope.

His gen'rous spouse, Theano, heav'nly fair,
Nurs'd the young stranger with a mother's care. Pope.

Pray for others in such forms, with such length, importunity, and earnestness, as you use for yourself; and you will find all little ill-natured passions die away, your heart grow great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others, as you used only to delight in your own. Law.

3. It is used of animals. Spritely; daring; courageous.

So the imperial eagle does not stay
Till the whole carcase he devour,
As if his gen'rous hunger understood

That he can never want plenty of food,
He only sucks the tasteful blood. Cowley.
Actæon spies
His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries:
A gen'rous pack. Addison.

4. Liberal; munificent.
When from his vest the young companion bore
The cup the gen'rous landlord own'd before,
And paid profusely with the precious bowl,
The stinted kindness of this churlish soul. Parnel.
Fast by the margin of her native flood,
Whose wealthy waters are well known to fame,
Fair as the bordering flowers the princess stood,
And rich in bounty as the gen'rous stream. Heigh.

5. Strong; vigorous.
Having in a digestive furnace drawn off the ardent spirit from some good sack, the phlegm, even in this generous wine, was copious. Boyle.
Those who in southern climes complain,
From Phœbus' rays they suffer pain,
Must own that pain is well repaid,
By gen'rous wines beneath a shade. Swift.

Here use all the rites of adoration, genuflexions, wax candles, incense, oblations, prayers only excepted. Stillingfleet.

GE'NUINE, jĕn'ù-ĭn.[160] adj. [genuinus, Lat.] Not spurious; not counterfeit; real; natural; true.

Experiments were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Boyle.

The belief and remembrance, and love and fear of God, have so great influence to make men religious, that where any of these is, the rest, together with the true and genuine effects of them, are supposed to be. Tillotson.

A sudden darkness covers all;
True genuine night: night added to the groves.
Dryden.

GE'NUINELY, jĕn'ù-ĭn-lĕ. adv. [from genuine.] Without adulteration; without foreign admixtures; naturally.

There is another agent able to analize compound bodies less violently, more genuinely, and more universally than the fire. Boyle.

GE'NUINENESS, jĕn'ù-ĭn-nĕs. n. s. [from genuine.] Freedom from any thing counterfeit; freedom from adulteration; purity; natural state.

It is not essential to the genuineness of colours to be durable. Boyle.

GE'NUS, jĕ'nŭs. n. s. [Lat.] In science, a class of being, comprehending under it many species: as quadruped is a genus comprehending under it almost all terrestrial beasts.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures: so animal is a genus, because it agrees to horse, lion, whale, and butterfly. Watts.

If minerals are not convertible into another species, though of the same genus, much less can they be surmised reducible into a species of another genus. Harvey.

GEOCE'NTRICK, jĕ-ò-sĕn'trĭk. adj. [γ and κεντρον; geocentrique, French.] Applied to a planet or orb having the earth for its centre, or the same centre with the earth. Harris.

GE'ODÆSIA, jĕ-ò-dĕ'zhĕ-â.[452] n. s. [γεωδαισια; geodesie, French.] That part of geometry which contains the doctrine or art of measuring surfaces, and finding the contents of all plane figures. Harris.

GEO'METRAL, jĕ-ŏm'ĕ-trâl. adj. [geometral, French; from geometry.] Pertaining to geometry. Dict.

GEOME'TRICAL, jĕ-ò-mĕt'trĕ-kâl. } adj.
GEOME'TRICK, jĕ-ò-mĕt'trĭk. }
[γεωμετρικὸς; geometrique, French, from geometry.]

1. Pertaining to geometry.

A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discerned by reason. More.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles doth teach to contrive several powers. Wilkins.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.

Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gathered the height and bigness of Hercules by his foot? Stillingfleet.

Does not this wise philosopher assert,
That the vast orb, which casts so fair his beams,
Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?
That the dimensions of his glorious face
Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass? Blackmore.

3. Disposed according to geometry.

Geometrick jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cruciformis. Grew.

GEOME'TRICALLY, jĕ-ò-mĕt'trĕ-kâl-ĕ. adv. [from geometrical.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Wilkins.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanicks. Ray.

GEOMETRI'CIAN, jĕ-ŏm-ĕ-trĭsh'ân. n. s. [γεωμέτρης.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. Brown.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles! Watts.

To GEO'METRIZE, jĕ-ŏm'ĕ-trĭze. v. n. [γεωμετρέω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometrize. Boyle.

GEO'METRY, jĕ-ŏm'mĕ-trĕ.[116 257 518] n. s. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, Fr.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude, abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice. Harris

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray.

Him also for my censor I disdain,
Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;
Who counts geometry and numbers toys,

GEOPO'NICAL, jē-ō-pŏn'ē-kăl. adj. [γη and πόνος; geoponique, French.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geoponical, or such as have treated de re rustica. Brown.

GERME, jĕrm. n. s. [germen, Latin.] A sprout or shoot; that part which grows and spreads.

Whether it be not made out of the germe, or treadle of the egg, doth seem of lesser doubt. Brown.

GE'RMIN, jĕr'mĭn. n. s. [germen, Latin.] A shooting or sprouting seed. Out of use.

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
Of nature's germins tumble all together,
Even 'till destruction sicken; answer me
To what I ask you. Shaksp.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world;
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ungrateful man. Shaksp.

To GE'RMINATE, jĕr'mē-nāte. v. n. [germino, Lat.] To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcites, which hath within a spirit that will put forth and germinate, as we see in chymical trials. Bacon.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amongst matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth. Woodward.

GERMINA'TION, jĕr-mē-nā'shŭn. n. s. [germination, Fr. from germinate.] The act of sprouting or shooting; growth.

For acceleration of germination, we shall handle the subject of plants generally. Bacon.

The duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned among the sponte nascentes. Wotton.

There is but little similitude between a terreous humidity and plantal germinations. Glanville.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; there the whole globe would be one frigid zone; there would be no life, no germination. Bentley.

GE'RUND, jĕr'rŭnd. n. s. [gerundium, Lat.] In the Latin grammar, a kind of verbal noun, which governs cases like a verb.

The removing of the pains we feel, is the getting out of misery, and consequently the first thing to be done, in order to happiness, absent good. Locke.

If, having got into the sense of the epistles, we will but compare what he says, in the places where he treats of the same subject, we can hardly be mistaken in his sense. Locke.

I got up as fast as possible, girt on my rapier, and snatched up my hat, when my landlady came up to me. Tatler.

Bucephalus would let nobody get upon him but Alexander the great. Addison.

Imprison'd fires in the close dungeons pent,
Roar to get loose, and struggle for a vent;
Eating their way, and undermining all,
'Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall. Addison.

When Alma now in diff'rent ages,
Has finish'd her ascending stages,
Into the head at length she gets,
And there in public grandeur sits,
To judge of things. Prior.

I resolved to break through all measures to get away. Swift.

2. To fall; to come by accident.

Two or three men of the town are got among them. Tatler.

3. To find the way; to insinuate itself.

When an egg is made hard by boiling, since there is nothing that appears to get in at the shell, unless some little particles of the water, it is not easy to discover from whence else this change proceeds than from a change made in the texture of the parts. Boyle.

He raves; his words are loose
As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense;
So high he 's mounted in his airy hopes,
That now the wind is got into his head,
And turns his brain to frenzy. Dryden.

A child runs to overtake and get up to the top of his shadow, which still advances at the same rate that he does. Locke.

Should dressing, feasting, and balls once get among the Cantons, their military roughness would be quickly lost. Addison.

The fluids which surround bodies, upon the surface of the globe, get in between the surfaces of bodies, when they are at any distance. Cheyne.

4. To move; to remove.

Get home with thy fewel made ready to set;
The sooner, and easier carriage to get. Tusser.

5. To have recourse to.

The Turks made great haste through the midst of the town ditch, to get up into the bulwark to help their fellows. Knolles.

Lying is so cheap a cover for any miscarriage, and so much in fashion, that a child can scarce be kept from getting into it. Locke.

6. To go; to repair.

They ran to their weapons, and furiously assailed the Turks, now fearing no such matter, and were not as yet all got into the castle. Knolles.

A knot of ladies, got together by themselves, is a very school of impertinence. Swift.

7. To put one's self in any state.

They might get over the river Avon at Stratford, and get between the king and Worcester. Clarendon.

We can neither find source nor issue for such an excessive mass of waters, neither where to have them; nor if we had them, how to get quit of them. Burnet.

Without his assistance we can no more get quit of our affliction, than but by his permission we should have fallen into it. Wake.

There is a sort of men who pretend to divest themselves of partiality on both sides, and to get above that imperfect idea of their subject which little writers fall into. Pope.

As the obtaining the love of valuable men is the happiest end of this life, so the next felicity is to get rid of fools and scoundrels. Pope.

8. To become by any act what one was not before.

The laughing sot, like all unthinking men,
Bathes and gets drunk; then bathes and drinks again. Dryden.

9. To be a gainer; to receive advantage.

Like jewels to advantage set,
Her beauty by the shade does get. Waller.

10. To GET off. To escape.

The gallies, by the benefit of the shores and shallows, got off. Bacon.

Whate'er thou dost, deliver not thy sword;
With that thou may'st get off, tho' odds oppose thee. Dryden.

11. To GET over. To conquer; to suppress; to pass without being stopped in thinking or acting.

'Tis very pleasant to hear the lady propose her doubts, and to see the pains he is at to get over them. Addison.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons. Swift.

To remove this difficulty, Peterborough was dispatched to Vienna, and got over some part of those disputes. Swift.

12. To GET up. To rise from repose.

Sheep will get up betimes in the morning to feed against rain. Bacon.

13. To GET up. To rise from a seat.

14. To remove from a place.

Get you up from about the tabernacle of Koran, Dathan, and Abiram. Numbers.

15. To get, in all its significations both active and neutral, implies the acquisition of something, or the arrival at some state or place by some means; except in the use of the preterit compound, which often implies mere possession: as, he has got a good estate, does not always mean that he has acquired, but barely that he possesses it. So we say the lady has got black eyes; merely meaning that she has them.

GE'TTER, gĕt'tŭr. n. s. [from get.]

1. One who procures or obtains.

2. One who begets on a female.

Peace is a very lethargy, a getter of more bastard children than war's a destroyer of men. Shakspeare.

GE'TTING, gĕt'ting. n. s. [from get.]

1. Act of getting; acquisition.

Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding. Proverbs.

2. Gain; profit.

Who hath a state to repair may not despise small things; and it is less dishonourable to abridge a petty charge than to stoop to petty gettings. Bacon.

The meaner families return a small share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child. Swift.

GE'WGAW, gū'gâw.[381] n. s. [ȝeȝar, Sax. joyau, French.] A showy trifle; a toy; a bauble; a splendid plaything.

That metal they exchanged for the meanest trifles and gewgaws which the others could bring. Abbot.

Prefer that which Providence has pronounced to be the staff of life, before a glittering gewgaw that has no other value than what vanity has set upon it L'Estrange.

As children, when they throw one toy away,
Straight a more foolish gewgaw comes in play. Dryden.

A heavy gewgaw, call'd a crown, that spread
About his temples, drown'd his narrow head,
And would have crush'd it. Dryden.

Some loose the bands
Of ancient friendship, cancel nature's laws,
For pageantry and tawdry gewgaws. Philips.

The first images were fans, silks, ribbands, laces, and many other gewgaws, which lay so thick that the whole heart was nothing else but a toyshop. Addison.

GE'WGAW, gū'gâw. adj. Splendidly trifling; showy without value.

Let him that would learn the happiness of religion, see the poor gewgaw happiness of Feliciana. Law.

GHA'STFUL, gâst'fûl.[390] adj. [ȝarc and fulle; Saxon.] Dreary; dismal; melancholy; fit for walking spirits. Obsolete.

Here will I dwell apart,
In ghastful grave, 'till my last sleep
Do close mine eyes:
Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound
Is sign of dreary death. Spenser.

GHA'STLINESS, gâst'lĕ-nĕs. n. s. [from ghastly.] Horrour of countenance; resemblance of a ghost; paleness.

GHA'STLY, gâst'lĕ. adj. [ȝarc, or ghost. and like.]

1. Like a ghost; having horrour in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
—O, I have past a miserable night;
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,
So full of dismal terrour was the time. Shaks.

Envy quickly discovered in court Solyman's changed countenance upon the great bassa, and began now to shew her ghastly face. Knolles.

Death
Grinn'd horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
His famine should be fill'd. Milton.

Those departed friends whom at our last separation we saw disfigured by all the ghastly horrours of death, we shall then see assisting about the majestick throne of Christ; with their once vile bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the hallelujahs of thrones, principalities, and powers. Boyle.

He came, but with such alter'd looks,
So wild, so ghastly, as if some ghost had met him,
All pale and speechless. Dryden.

I did not for these ghastly visions send;
Their sudden coming does some ill portend. Dryd.

2. Horrible; shocking; dreadful.

To be less than gods
Disdained; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their flight,
Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail. Milton.

I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier! Prior.

GHA'STNESS, gâst'nĕs. n. s. [from ȝarc, Saxon.] Ghastliness; horrour of look. Not used.

Look you pale, mistress?
Do you perceive the ghastness of the eye? Shaks.

To GHESS, gĕs. v. n. [See To GUESS. Ghess is by criticks considered as the true orthography, but guess has universally prevailed.] To conjecture.

GHOST, gōst.[390] n. s. [ȝarc, Saxon.]

1. The soul of man.

Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! He hates him,
That would upon the rack of this rough world
Stretch him out longer. Shakspeare.

Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul. Shakspeare.

2. A spirit appearing after death.

The mighty ghosts of our great Harrys rose,
And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes,
To see this fleet among unequal foes,
By which fate promis'd them their Charles should rise. Dryden.

3. To give up the GHOST. To die; to yield up the spirit into the hands of God.

Their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies ready to give up the ghost. Shaks.

4. The third person in the adorable Trinity, called the Holy Ghost.

To GHOST, gōst. v. n. [from the noun.] To yield up the ghost; to die. Not in use.

Euryalus taking leave of Lucretia, precipitated her into such a love-fit, that within a few hours she ghosted. Sidney.

To GHOST, gōst. v. a. To haunt with apparitions of departed men. Obsolete.

Julius Cæsar
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. Shakspeare.

GHO'STLINESS, gōst'lĕ-nĕs. n. s. [from ghostly.] Spiritual tendency; quality of having reference chiefly to the soul.

GHO'STLY, gōst'lĕ. adj. [from ghost.]

1. Spiritual; relating to the soul; not carnal; not secular.

Save and defend us from our ghostly enemies. Common Prayer.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have, as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind so easily known, but the gifts of God, according to these degrees and times, which he in his secret wisdom seeth meet, are so diversely bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive, what all stand in need of, it seldom lieth hid. Hooker.

The graces of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly evils of greater importance than any harm which the body feeleth. Hooker.

To deny me the ghostly comfort of my chaplains, seems a greater barbarity than is ever used by christians. King Charles.

2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.

Hence will I to my ghostly friar's close cell,
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. Shaks.

The ghostly father now hath done his shrift. Shakspeare.

GIA'LALINA, jĕ-âl'âl-ĕ-nâ. n. s. [Ital.] Earth of a bright gold colour, found in the kingdom of Napies, very fine, and much valued by painters. Woodward.

GIA'MBEUX, jâm'bōōz. n. s. [jambes, Fr.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.

The mortal steel despiteously entail'd
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their giambeux falls. Spenser.

GI'ANT, jï'ânt. n. s. [geant, Fr. gigas, Latin.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness.

Now does he feel his axle
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief. Shakspeare.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakspeare.

Woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant rude invention;
Such Ethiop words. Shakspeare.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars,
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise! Milton.

Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time. Raleigh.

The giant brothers, in their camp, have found
I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground. Dryden.

By weary steps and slow
The groping giant with a trunk of pine
Explor'd his way. Addison.

Neptune, by prayer repentant, rarely won,
Afflicts the chief t' avenge his giant son,
Great Polypheme of more than mortal might. Pope.

GI'ANTESS, jï'ân-tês. n s. [from giant.] A she-giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Shakspeare.

Were this subject to the cedar, she would be able to make head against that huge giantess. Howel.

GI'ANTLIKE, jï'ânt-like. } adj. [from giant and like.] Gigantick; vast; bulky.
GI'ANTLY, jï'ânt-lê. }

Single courage has often, without romance, overcome giantly difficulties. Decay of Piety.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giant-like objections against the christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the field. South.

GI'ANTSHIP, jï'ânt-shîp. n. s. [from giant.] Quality or character of a giant.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest fallen,
Stalking with less unconscionable strides,

GI'BBE, gîb.[382] n. s. Any old worn-out animal. Hanmer.

For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gibbe,
Such dear concernings hide? Shakspeare.

To GI'BBER, gîb'bûr.[383] v. n. [from jabber.] To speak inarticulately.

The sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shakspeare.

GI'BBERISH, gîb'bûr-îsh.[382] n. s. [Derived by Skinner from gaber, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber. But as it was anciently written gebrish, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe.] Cant; the private language of rogues and gipsies; words without meaning.

Some, if they happen to hear an old word, albeit very natural and significant, cry out straightway, that we speak no English, but gibberish. Spenser.

Some of both sexes writing down a number of letters, just as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberish, that which the men had wrote sounded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian. Swift.

GI'BBET, jîb'bît. n. s. [gibet, French.]

1. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their carcases are exposed.

When was there ever cursed atheist brought
Unto the gibbet, but he did adore
That blessed pow'r which he had set at nought? Davies.

You scandal to the stock of verse, a race
Able to bring the gibbet in disgrace. Cleaveland.

Haman suffered death himself upon the very gibbet that he had provided for another. L'Estrange.

Papers lay such principles to the Tories, as, if they were true, our next business should be to erect gibbets in every parish, and hang them out of the way. Swift.

2. Any traverse beams.

GIBBO'SITY, gîb-bôs'ê-tê. n. s. [gibbosité, Fr. from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

When ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water? Ray.

GI'BBOUS, gîb'bûs.[382] adj. [gibbus, Lat. gibbeux, French.]

1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member. Wiseman.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.

The sea, by this access and recess, shuffling the empty shells, wears them away, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat. Woodward.

2. Crookbacked.

I demand how the camels of Bractria came to have two bunches in their back, whereas the camels of Arabia have but one? How oxen, in some countries, began and continue gibbous or hunchbacked? Brown.

GI'BBOUSNESS, gîb'bûs-nês. n. s. [from gibbous.] Convexity: prominence.

To make the convexity of the earth discernible, suppose a man lifted in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon; but then, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away, and he would only see a great circular flat. Bentley.

GI'BCAT, gîb'kât.[382] n. s. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear. Shakspeare.

To GIBE, jîbe. v. n. [gaber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party. Hooker.

When he saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And pass the bounds of modest merry make,
Her dalliance he despis'd. Spenser.

Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools. Shakspeare.

Thus with talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude,
When you pertly raise your snout,
Fleer and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

To GIBE, jîbe. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shaksp.

Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them. Swift.

GIBE, jîbe. n. s. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn; taunt.

Mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face. Shaksp.

The rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden.

If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment. Spectator.

But the dean, if this secret should come to his ears,
Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers. Swift.

GI'BER, jî'bûr. n. s. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the table, than a necessary bencher of the capitol. Shaksp.

He is a giber, and our present business
Is of more serious consequence. Ben Jonson.

GI'BINGLY, jî'bîng-lê. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.

His present portance,
Gibingly and ungravely he did fashion
After th' inveterate hate he bears to you. Shaksp.

GI'BLETS, jîb'lêts. n. s. [according to Minshew from gobbet, gobblet: according to Junius more probably from gibier, game, French.] The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.

'Tis holyday; provide me better cheer:
'Tis holyday; and shall be round the year:
Shall I my household gods and genius cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may loll at ease; and pamper'd high,
When I am laid, may feed on giblet pie? Dryden.

GI'BSTAFF, jîb'stâf. n. s.

1. A long staff to gage water, or to shove forth a vessel into the deep.

As Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill. Pope.

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; changeful.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are. Shaksp.

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have. Bacon.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
She cast us headlong from our high estate,
And here in hope of thy return we wait. Dryden.

The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,
With noise say nothing, and in parts divide. Dryd.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope, who hath always loved a domestick life. Swift to Gay.

4. That causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood,
The giddy precipice, and the dang'rous flood. Prior.

The sylphs through mystick mazes guide their way,
Through all the giddy circle they pursue. Pope.

5. Heedless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild

Too many giddy foolish hours are gone,
And in fantastick measures danc'd away. Rowe.

How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who, in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed. Clarissa.

As we have pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought that Glo'ster stumbled. Shaksp.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering inticement.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion? Shaksp.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes;
Hearing applause and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt,
Whether those peals of praise be his or no, Shaksp.

To GI'DDY, gîd'dê. v. n. [from the noun.] To turn quick. Obsolete.

A sodaine north-wind fetcht,
With an extreme sea, quite about againe,
Our whole endeavours; and our course constrain
To giddie round. Chapman.

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh. Matthew.

Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess;
But first take back my life, a gift that 's less. Dryd.

2. The act of giving.

Creator bounteous and benign,
Giver of all things good, but fairest this
Of all thy gifts nor envyest. Milton.

Thee all things living gaze on, all things thine
By gift. Milton.

3. The right or power of bestowing.

They cannot give;
For had the gift been theirs, it had not here
Thus grown. Milton.

No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift. South.

4. Oblation; offering.

Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven. Tobit.

5. A bribe.

Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise. Deuteronomy.

6. Power; faculty.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shaksp.

She was lovely to attract
Thy love, not thy subjection, and her gifts
Were such as made government well seem'd
Unseemly to bear rule. Milton.

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his talents. Addison.

GI'FTED, gîf'têd. adj. [from gift.]

1. Given; bestowed.

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heaven gifted strength. Milton.

2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.

Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and harangued the people to dispose them to an insurrection. Dryd.

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory. Addison.

GIG, gîg.[382] n. s. [Etymology uncertain.]

1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.

Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them. Locke.

2. [gigia, Islandick.] A fiddle. Out of use.

GIGA'NTICK, jî-gân'tîk.[217] adj. [gigantes, Lat.] Suitable to a giant; big; bulky; enormous: likewise wicked; atrocious.

Others from the wall defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milton.

I dread him not, nor all his giant brood,
Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
All of gigantick size, Goliah chief. Milton

The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders, and gigantick limbs. Dryd.

The Cyclopean race in arms arose;
A lawless nation of gigantick foes. Pope.

To GI'GGLE, gîg'gl.[382] v. n. [gichelin, Dutch.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity. It is retained in Scotland.

We shew our present joking, giggling race;
True joy consists in gravity and grace. Garrick.

GI'GGLER, gîg'gl-ûr. n. s. [from giggle.] A laugher; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.

A sad wise valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milkmaid whom infection,
Or the fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herbert.

GI'GLET, gîg'gl-ît. n. s. [ȝeaȝl, Saxon; geyl, Dutch; gillet, Scotish, is still retained.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. Out of use.

Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a giglet wench. Shaksp.

The fam'd Cassibelan was once at point,
Oh giglet fortune! to master Cæsar's sword. Shak.

Away with those giglets too, and with the other confederate companion. Shaksp.

GI'GOT, jîg'ût. n. s. [French.] The hip joint. It seems to mean in Chapman a joint for the spit.

The inwards slit,
They broil'd on coales and eate: the rest, in gigots cut, they split. Chapman.

To GILD, gîld[382] v. a. pret. gilded or gilt. [ȝildan, Saxon.]

1. To overlay with thin gold; to cover with foliated gold.

The room was large and wide,
As it some gilt or solemn temple were:
Many great golden pillars did uprear
The massy roof. Spenser.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet. Shaksp.

And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton.

Purchasing riches with our time and care,
We lose our freedom in a gilded snare. Roscommon.

When Britain, looking with a just disdain
Upon this gilded majesty of Spain,
And knowing well that empire must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of coin. Waller.

Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive;
And love of ombre after death survive. Pope.

2. To cover with any yellow matter.

Thou didst drink
The stale of horses and the gilded puddle,
Which beasts would cough at. Shaksp.

3. To adorn with lustre.
No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,
Nor ev'ning Cynthia fill her silver horn. Pope.
4. To brighten; to illuminate.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.
5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shaksp.
Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight;
'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the sight. Dryd.

GI'LDER, gîl'dûr. n. s. [from gild.]
1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.
Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to draw the spirits of the quicksilver. Bacon.
We have here a gilder with his anvil and hammer. Broome.
2. A coin from one shilling and six pence to two shillings. Phillips.
I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shaksp.

GI'LDING, gîl'dîng. n. s. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.
Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon.
The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.
Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.

GILL, jîl. n. s. [agulla, Span. gula, Lat.]
1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.
The leviathan,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land, and at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton.
Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills. Ray.
He had two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but before them. Walton.
'Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left. King.
2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.
The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon.
3. The flesh under the chin.
In many there is no paleness at all; but contrarywise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon.
Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.
4. [gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint, or, in some places, half of a pint.
Every bottle must be rinced with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rince a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.
5. A kind of measure among the tinners.
They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint. Carew.
6. [from Gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.
I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill. Ben Jonson.
7. [chelidonium.] A plant; ground-ivy.
8. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.
In sense four, and all following, it is spoken JILL, jîl.

GI'LLHOUSE, jîl'hôûs. n. s. [gill and house.] A house where gill is sold.
Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,
And answering ginshops sourer sighs return. Pope.

GI'LLYFLOWER, jîl'lê-flôûr. n. s. [either corrupted from Julyflower, or from giroflée, Fr.]
Gillyflowers, or rather Julyflowers, so called from the month they blow in, may be reduced to these sorts; red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white. Mortimer.
In July come gilly flowers of all varieties. Bacon.
Fair is the gillyflow'r of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet. Gay.

GILT, gîlt.[382] n. s. [from gild.] Golden show; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Obsolete.
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shaksp.
When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. Shakspeare.

GILT, gîlt.[360] The participle of gild.
Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way. Pope.

GI'LTHEAD, gîlt'hêd. n. s. [gilt and head.]
1. A sea fish. Dict.
2. A bird.
He blended together the livers of giltheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phenicopters, and the melts of lampres. Hakewill.

GILT-TAIL, gîlt'tâle. n. s. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM, jîm. adj. [an old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.

GI'MCRACK, jîm'krâk. n. s. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.
For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
What's the meaning of all these trangrams and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbuthnot.

GI'MLET, gîm'lêt.[382] n. s. [gibelet, guimbelete, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.
The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Moxon.

GI'MMAL, gîm'mâl. n. s. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gimellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hanmer.
I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shaksp.

GI'MMER, gîm'mûr. n. s. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.
The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magick. More's Divine Dialogues.

GIMP, gîmp.[382] n. s. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN, jîn. n. s. [from engine.]
1. A trap; a snare.
As the day begins,
With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pastime make. Sidney.
Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Hath slain sir Mordant. Spenser.
So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net. Shakspeare.
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty. Shakspeare.
If those, who have but sense, can shun
The engines that have them annoy'd;
Little for me had reason done,
If I could not thy gins avoid. Ben Jonson.
I know thy trains,
Though dearly to my cost; thy gins and toils
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.
He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without the expence of cheese and bacon. Hudibras.
Keep from flaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras.
2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.
Typhæus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spens.
3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.
The delfs would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray.
A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water drivelling on the outside of the gin pump of Mostyn coalpits. Woodward.
4. [Contracted from GENEVA.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper-berries.
This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.
Gin shops sourer sighs return. Pope.

GI'NGER, jîn'jûr. n. s. [zinziber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]
The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.
The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves. Hill.
Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope.

GI'NGERBREAD, jîn'jûr-brêd. n. s. [ginger and bread.] A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some aromatic seeds. It is sometimes gilt.
An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakspeare.
Her currents there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread.
King's Cookery.
'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.

GI'NGERLY, jîn'jûr-lê. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.
What is 't that you
Took up so gingerly? Shakspeare.

GI'NGERNESS, jîn'jûr-nês. n. s. Niceness; tenderness. Dict.

GI'NGIVAL, jîn'jê-vâl. adj. [gingiva, Lat.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occluse appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perviousness. Holder.

To GI'NGLE, jîng'gl.[405] v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence sound. Gay.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

To GI'NGLE, jîng'gl. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GI'NGLE, jîng'gl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.
2. Affectation in the sounds of periods.

GI'NGLYMOID, ging'glê-môîd. adj. [γιγλυμος, a hinge, and εἶδος.] Resembling a ginglymus, approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Holder.

GI'NGLYMUS, ging'glê-mûs. n. s. A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, in the manner of a hinge, of which the elbow is an instance. Wiseman.

GI'NNET, jîn'nêt. n. s. [γίννος.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.

GI'NSENG, jîn'sêng. n. s. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatic, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

To GIP, jîp. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GI'PSY, jîp'sê.[438] n. s. [corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps, truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmestry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.

A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants. Prior.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmestry;
A sigil in his hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetick sieve and sheers. Garth.

I, near yon stile, three sallow gypsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to her lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakspeare.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

GI'RASOLE, jî'râ-sôle. n. s. [girasol, Fr.]

1. The herb turnsol.
2. The opal stone.

To GIRD, gêrd.[382 560] v. a. pret. girded or girt. [ȝyrdan, Saxon.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Maccabees.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Swift.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milt.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe. Addison.

The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in reguerdon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shaksp.

The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence. Milton.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk. Ezekiel.

Tysiphone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together sow'd,
To gird their waist: vain covering, if it hide
Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton.

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton.

8. To enclose; to encircle.

That Nyseian isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milton.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. Shakspeare.

To GIRD, gêrd. v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original; it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gride or cut.] To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

This wond'red error growth
At which our criticks gird. Drayton.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakspeare.

GIRD, gêrd. n. s. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang: it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird;
For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent. Shaks.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels. Tillotson.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman.

GI'RDER, gêr'dûr. n. s. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joints are framed in at one arm to the girders. Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Moxon.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd. Black.

GI'RDLE, gêr'dl.[405] n. s. [ȝyrdel, Sax.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle,
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakspeare.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle. Brown.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cowley.

2. Enclosure; circumference.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies. Shaksp.

3. The zodiack.

Great breezes in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, do refrigerate. Bacon.

To GI'RDLE, gêr'dl. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.

Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another
Within their innocent alabaster arms. Shakspeare.

2. To enclose; to shut in; to environ.

Those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about. Shakspeare.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Shakspeare.

GI'RDLEBELT, gêr'dl-bêlt. n. s. [girdle and belt.] The belt that encircles the waist.

Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold. Dryd.

GI'RDLER, gêr'dl-ûr. n. s. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles.

GIRE, jîre. n. s. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL, gêrl.[382] n. s. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meria Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from κορη, of the same signification; Minshew from garrula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from herlodes, Welsh, from which, says he, harlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceorl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hickes derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl.
Shakspeare.
I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shaksp.
The foole Amphimachus, to field brought gold to be his wracke,
Proud girle like, that doth ever beare her dowre upon her backe. Chapman.
A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Donne.
Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimick follies of a farce,
As a grave matron would to dance with girls.
Roscommon.
A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh! a girl like her, must be divine! Dryden.

GI'RLISH, gêrl'lish. adj. [from girl.] Suiting a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor.
Carew.

GI'RLISHLY, gêrl'lish-lê. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

To GIRN, gêrn. v. n. It seems to be a corruption of grin. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or peevish person.

GI'RROCK, gîr'rôk. n. s. [acus major.] A kind of fish. Dict.

GIRT, gêrt.[382] The part. pass. of gird.

To GIRT, gêrt. v. a. [from gird.] To gird; to encompass; to encircle. Not proper.

In the dread ocean, undulating wide
Beneath the radiant line that girts the globe.
Thomson.

GIRT, gêrt. } [382] n. s. [from gird.]
GIRTH, gêr*th*. }

1. A band by which the saddle or burden is fixed upon the horse.

Here lies old Hobson, death hath broke his girt;
And here, alas! hath laid him in the dirt. Milton.
Or the saddle turn'd round, or the girths brake;
For low on the ground, woe for his sake,
The law is found. Ben Jonson.
Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;
The steed oppress'd, would brake his girth,
To raise the lumber from the earth. Swift.
Mordanto gallops on alone;
The roads are with his foll'wers strown;
This breaks a girth and that a bone. Swift.

2. A circular bandage.

The most common way of bandage is by that of the girt, which girt hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are tacked firmly together. Wiseman

3. The compass measured by the girdle, or enclosing bandage.

He 's a lusty jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth. Addison.

To GIRTH, gêr*th*. v. a. To bind with a girth.

To GISE Ground, gize. v. a. Is when the owner of it does not feed it with his own stock, but takes in other cattle to graze. Bailey.

GI'SLE, gîz'zl. Among the English Saxons, signifies a pledge: thus, Fredgisle is a pledge of peace; Gislebert an illustrious pledge, like the Greek Homerus. Gibson's Camden.

GITH, gî*th*. n. s. [nigella.] An herb called Guinea pepper.

To GIVE, giv.[157] [382] v. a. preter. gave; part. pass. given. [ȝiꝑan, Saxon.]

1. To bestow; to confer without any price or reward; not to sell.

I had a master that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again.
Temple.
Constant at church and change; his gains were sure,
His givings rare, save farthings to the poor. Pope.
While tradesmen starve these Philomels are gay;
For gen'rous lords had rather give than pay. Young.
Half useless doom'd to live,
Pray'rs and advice are all I have to give. Harte.

2. To transmit from himself to another by hand, speech, or writing; to deliver.

The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat. Genesis.
They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. Matthew.

Scarce had he spoken when the cloud gave way;
The mists flew upwards, and dissolv'd in day. Dryd.
His golden helm gives way with stony blows,
Batter'd and flat, and beaten to his brows. Dryden.

37. The word give is used with great laxity, the general idea is that of transmitting from one to another.

To GIVE, gîv. v. n.

1. To rush; to fall on; to give the assault. A phrase merely French, and not worthy of adoption.

Your orders come too late, the fight's begun;
The enemy gives on with fury led. Dryden.
Hannibal gave upon the Romans. Hooke.

2. To relent; to grow moist; to melt or soften; to thaw.

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft; as the crust of bread, bisket, sweetmeats, and salt. Bacon's Natural History.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like season'd timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,
Then chiefly lives. Herbert.

Unless it is kept in a hot house, it will so give again, that it will be little better than raw malt. Mortimer.

Before you carry your large cocks in, open them once, and spread them: hay is apt to give in the cock. Mortimer.

3. To move. A French phrase.

Up and down he traverses his ground,
Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on amain.
Daniel's Civil War.

4. To GIVE in. To go back; to give way. Not in use.

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in. Hayward.

5. To GIVE into. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medalists; the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnished us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addison.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

6. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceive that it reaches the mind. Locke.

7. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can show we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker.

Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; lest, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker.

Give not o'er so; to him again; intreat him,
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold. Shakspeare.

The state of human actions is so variable, that to try things oft and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse
Met ever, and to shameful silence brought,
Yet gives not o'er, though desperate of success.
Milton.

Shall we kindle all this flame
Only to put it out again?
And must we now give o'er,
And only end where we begun?
In vain this mischief we have done,
If we can do no more. Denham.

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any farther pursuits after fame. Addison.

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.

8. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.

9. To GIVE out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about:
And 'till they foot and clutch their prey;
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout,
That for twenty denials you would not give out.
Swift.

GI'VER, gîv'ûr. n. s. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributer; granter.

Well we may afford
Our givers their own gifts. Milton.

By thee how fairly is the giver now
Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost
Long since. Milton.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;
The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;
Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

GIVES, jîvz. n. s. Fetters or shackles for the feet.

GI'ZZARD, gîz'zûrd.[88] [382] n. s. [gesier, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzern.

1. The strong musculous stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzerne. Ne.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth, but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or musculous stomach. Ray on the Creation.

They nestle near the throne,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known.
Dryden.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind: as, he frets his gizzard, he harasses his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are too warm;
Which puts the overheated sorts
In fevers still. Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so cursedly hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that their blood is not half so dear to them as the treasure in their coffers. L'Estrange.

GLA'BRITY, glâb'rê-tê. n. s. [from glaber, Latin.] Smoothness; baldness. Dict.

GLA'CIAL, glâ'shê-âl.[113] adj. [glacial, Fr. glacialis, Latin.] Icy; made of ice; frozen.

GLACIA'TION, glâ-shê-â'shûn. n. s. [from glaciate.] The act of turning into ice; ice formed.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown.

GLA'CIOUS, glâ'shûs. adj. [glacio, Latin.] Icy; resembling ice.

Although exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glacious bodies. Brown.

GLA'CIS, glâ'sîs, or glâ-sèze'. n. s. [French.] In fortification, a sloping bank. It is more especially taken for that which rangeth from the parapet of the covered way to the level on the side of the field. Harris.

GLAD, glâd. adj. [glæd, Saxon; glad, Danish.]

1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents, joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings.

Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light. Milton.

The wily adder blithe and glad. Milton.

Thither they
Hasted with glad precipitance. Milton.

2. Wearing a gay appearance; fertile; bright; showy.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. Isaiah.

Then first adorn'd
With their bright luminaries, that set and rose,
Glad ev'ning and glad morn crown'd the fourth day.
Milton.

3. Pleased; elevated with joy. It has generally of, sometimes at or with before the cause of gladness: perhaps of is most proper, when the cause of joy is something gained or possessed; and at or with, when it is some accident befallen himself or another.

I am glad to see your worship. Shakspeare.

He hath an uncle in Messia will be very much glad of it. Shakspeare.

He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished. Proverbs.

He glad
Of her attention, gain'd with serpent tongue,
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Milton.

If he be my enemy, let him triumph; if he be my friend, he will be glad of my repentance. Dryden.

The Trojan, glad with sight of hostile blood,
His fauchion drew. Dryden.

Glad of a quarrel strait I clap the door. Pope.

4. Pleasing; exhilarating.

Her conversation
More glad to me than to a miser money is. Sidney.

5. Expressing gladness.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers:
Prepare the way, a god, a god appears! Pope.

6. It is used in a familiar sense, approaching to ludicrousness.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it. Locke.

To GLAD, glåd. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour
Of th' icy north; from frost-bound Atlas hands
His adamantine fetters fall: green vigour
Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands. Crashaw.

It glads me
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Otway.

Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man. Pope.

If justice Philips' costive head,
Some frigid rhymes disburses,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

To GLA'DDEN, glåd'd'n.[103] v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him. Addison.

A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her, when she does not attend to it. Addison.

GLA'DDER, glåd'dûr. n. s. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
Have pity, goddess. Dryden.

GLADE, glåde. n. s. [from ȝlop̄an, to be hot, or to shine: whence the Danish glod, and the obsolete English gleed, a red hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucus. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.

So flam'd his eyen with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser.

Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade,
The lion sleeping, lay in secret shade. Hub. Tale.

O might I here,
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton.

When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton.

For noonday's heat are closer arbours made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ner glade. Dryden.

There interspers'd in lawns and op'ning glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.

By the heroes armed shades
Glitt'ring through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh! take the husband or restore the wife! Pope.

She smil'd, array'd
With all the charms of sun-shine, stream and glade,
New drest and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.

GLA'DEN, glåd'dn. } n. s. [from gladius,
GLA'DER, glåd'dûr. } Latin, a sword.] Swordgrass: a general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Junius.

GLA'DFULNESS, glåd'fûl-nês. n. s. [glad and fulness.] Joy; gladness. Obsolete.

And there him rests in riotous suffisance
Of all his gladfulness, and kingly joyance. Spenser.

GLADIA'TOR, glåd-dê-å'tûr.[534] n. s. [Latin; gladiateur, French.] A swordplayer; a prizefighter.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denham.

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryd.

GLA'DLY, glåd'lê. adv. [from glad.] Joyfully; with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shaksp.

You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of. Blount to Pope.

GLA'DNESS, glåd'nês. n. s. [from glad.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before:
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perish'd they deplore. Dryden.

GLA'DSOME, glåd'sûm. adj. [from glad.]

1. Pleased; gay; delighted.

The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in gladsome company. Fairy Queen.

The gladsome ghost in circling troops attend,
And with unweary'd eyes behold their friend. Dryden.

2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day. Prior.

GLA'DSOMELY, glåd'sûm-lê. adv. [from gladsome.] With gayety and delight.

GLA'DSOMENESS, glåd'sûm-nês. n. s. [from gladsome.] Gayety; showyness; delight.

GLAIRE, glåre. n. s. [ȝlæp̄, Sax. amber; glar, Danish, glass; glaire, Fr. glarea, Latin.]

1. The white of an egg.

Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water. Peacham.

2. A kind of halbert. Dict.

To GLAIRE, glåre. v. a. [glairer, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.

GLANCE, glånse.[78 79] n. s. [glantz, German, glitter.]

1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.

His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n
Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam:
The other's not, for his was not sincere. Milton.

2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.

The aspects which procure love are not gazings, but sudden glances and dartings of the eye. Bacon.

There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity. Dryden.

Boldly she look'd, like one of high degree:
Yet never seem'd to cast a glance on me;
At which I inly joy'd, for truth to say,
I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay. Harte.

3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.

The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Watts.

To GLANCE, glånse. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.

He double blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Spenser.

When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rowe.

2. To fly off in an oblique direction.

He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright. Shak.

3. To strike in an oblique direction.

Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank descends. Pope.

4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.

O' th' sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;
Then dance again and kiss. Suckling.

Mighty dulness crown'd,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;
And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce. Pope.

5. To censure by oblique hints.

How canst thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus? Shaksp.

Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon.

I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter for many ludicrous speculations. Addison.

He had written verses wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor famous for dulness. Swift.

To GLANCE, glånse. v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.

Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shaksp.

GLA'NCINGLY, glån'sing-lê. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.

Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokingly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill.

GLAND, gland. n. s. [glans, Lat. gland, French.] The glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin; by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out; of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The abcess begun deep in the body of the glands. Wiseman.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twisted with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackm.

GLA'NDERS, glân'dûrz. n. s. [from gland.] In a horse, is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black. Farrier's Dict.

His horse is possest with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine. Shakspeare.

GLANDI'FEROUS, glân-dîf'fê-rûs. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns; or fruit like acorns.

The beach is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees. Mortimer.

GLA'NDULE, glân'dûle. n. s. [glandula, Latin; glandule, French.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Ray.

GLANDULO'SITY, glân-dû-lôs'ê-tê. n. s. [from glandulous.] A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosities. Brown.

GLA'NDULOUS, glân'dû-lûs.[284] adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glanduleux, Fr. from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.

The beaver's bags are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours, and ruptures of the lymphaticks. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To GLARE, glâre. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of foul Alecto flame Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryd.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to sight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryd.

Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakspeare.

Look, how pale he glares! Shakspeare.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met they made a surly stand,
And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,
And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest or most correct. Felton.

To GLARE, glâre. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurst, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE, glâre. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. Addison.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round,
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton.

GLA'REOUS, glâ'rê-ûs. adj. [glarieux, Fr. glareosus, Latin; from glaire.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLA'RING, glâ'rîng. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS, glâs.[79] n. s. [ȝlæȝ, Saxon; glas, Dutch; as Pezon imagines, from glâs, British, green. In Erse it is called klânn, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.]

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glass, from the verb glansen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peacham.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of grenadoes rain by sudden burst
Disploding murd'rous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glass and nitrous grain adust. Philips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more,
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass
Which shews me many more. Shakspeare.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.

He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. Shakspeare.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses, to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass. Shakspeare.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royal self did live, no more his noble sonne,
The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup or glass used to drink in.

To this last costly treaty,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' th' rinsing. Shakspeare.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, be sure
'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor.

The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass.

The moon whose orb
Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views. Milton.

Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS, glâs. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glass eyes:
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou dost not. Shakspeare.

Glass bottles are more fit for this second fining than those of wood. Mortimer.

To GLASS, glâs. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirrour. Not in use.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glasst,
Did point out to buy them, along as you past. Shakspeare.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glassed over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLA'SSFURNACE, glâs'fûr-nâs. n. s. [glass and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glassfurnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLA'SSGAZING, glâs'gâ-zîng. adj. [glass and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, glassgazing, finical rogue. Shaks

GLA'SSGRINDER, glâs'grind'ûr. n. s. [glass and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLA'SSHOUSE, glâs'hôûse. n. s. [glass and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Addison.

GLA'SSMAN, glâs'mân.[88] n. s. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.

GLA'SSMETAL, glâs'mêt-tl. n. s. [glass and metal.] Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon.

GLA'SSWORK, glâs'wûrk. n. s. [glass and work.] Manufacture of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. Bacon.

GLA'SSWORT, glâs'wûrt. n. s. [salicornia, or saltwort.] A plant.

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryoes grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryoes afterward become pods or bladders, which, for the most part, contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of summer; and having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown.

GLA'SSY, glâs'sê. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; insomuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastick tricks before high heav'n,
As makes the angels weep. Shakspeare.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shakspeare.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on winter's head? Sandys.
The glassy deep. Dryden.

GLASTONBURY Thorn, glâs-s'n-bêr-ê-*th*ôrn'. n. s. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in winter, and flowers again in spring. Miller.

GLAUCO'MA, glâw-kô'mâ. n. s. [γλαύκωμα; glaucome, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a grayish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAVE, glâve. n. s. [glaive, French; glaif, a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in sight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glave had pendant by his side. Fairfax.
When zeal, with aged clubs and glaves
Gave chase to rockets and white staves. Hudibras.

To GLA'VER, glâ'vûr. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glipan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

To GLAZE, glâze. v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware. [from the French glâise, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shaks.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it sound reason that carries the stroke home. Grew.

White, with other strong colours with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden.

GLA'ZIER, glâ'zhûr.[283 450] n. s. [corrupted from glasier, or glassier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbets the several panes of glasswork are set and fastened by the glazier. Moxon.

The dex'trous glazier strong returns the bound,
And gingling sashes on the penthouse sound. Gay.
And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part. Harte.

GLEAM, glême. [2] n. s. [ȝelioma, Sax.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.
At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast. Dryd.
We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addis.
In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams
Fires that glow. Pope.

To GLEAM, glême. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-eyed morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled east. Thomson's Summer.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees. Thomson.

GLEA'MY, glê'mê. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way. Pope.

To GLEAN, glêne.[227] v a. [glaner, Fr. as Skinner thinks, from granum, Lat.]

1. To gather what the reapers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palæmon's fields. Thomson.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shaks
That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion. Shaks

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well known face with wonted fear;
As when his thundering sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear, Dryden.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN, glêne. n. s. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden.

GLE'ANER, glê'nûr. n. s. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thom.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman. Locke.

GLE'ANING, glê'nîng. n. s. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury.

GLEBE, glêbe. n. s. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in sedgy bowers;
The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers
Of rank and mellow glebe. Drayton.
Fertile of corn the glebe of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
'Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to-day. Garth.

2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliffe.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLE'BOUS, glè'bûs. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Dict.

GLE'BY, glè'bè. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flatt'ry! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.

GLEDE, glède. n. s. [ȝlidaȝlide, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture. Deuteronomy.

GLEE, glèè. n. s. [ȝligge, Sax.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee.
Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee by vexing the inhabitants; who again foreslow not to baigne them with perfume. Carew.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewell my glee!
No happiness is now reserv'd for me. Gay.

The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free. Harte.

GLEED, glède. n. s. [from ȝlopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLE'EFUL, glèè'fûl. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?
Shaksp.

GLEEK, glèèk. n. s. [ȝligge, Sax.] Musick; or musician.

What will you give us?——No money, but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel. Shaksp.

To GLEEK, glèèk. v. a. [ȝligman, in Saxon, is a mimick or a droll.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion. Shaksp.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shaksp.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimickry or drollery.

To GLEEN, glèèn. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place.

Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.

GLEET, glèèt. n. s. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from ȝliban, Saxon, to run softly.] A sanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet. Wiseman.

To GLEET, glèèt. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

A thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops. Wiseman.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains; whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a bason. Cheyne.

GLE'ETY, glèè'tè. adj. [from gleet.] Ichorous; thinly sanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting. Wiseman.

GLEN, glèn. n. s. [gleann, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And wooes the widow's daughter of the glen.
Spenser.

GLEW, glû. n. s. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB, glîb. adj. [from λείβω. Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope compactly twisted together, with a noose that slipt as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Arbuthnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,
I'll do 't before I speak. Shaksp.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains;
And then, to make them pass the glibber,
Reviz'd by Tibbald, More, and Cibber. Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran.
Swift.

GLIB, glîb. n. s.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them. Spenser.

To GLIB, glîb. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs,
And I had rather glib myself, than they
Should not produce fair issue. Shaksp.

GLI'BLY, glîb'lè. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as conscience recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction.
Government of the Tongue.

GLI'BNESS, glîb'nês. n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold
The rock. Chapman.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving. Gov. of the Tongue.

To GLIDE, glide. v. n. [ȝliban, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By east, among the dusty vallies glide
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.
Fairfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

Just before the confines of the wood,
The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood. Dryden.

Where stray the muses, in what lawn or grove?
In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides. Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystic wonders of your silent state. Dryden.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day? Shaksp.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave. Milton.

He trembled every limb, and felt a smart
As if cold steel had glided through his heart. Dryd.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear.
Dryden.

GLIDE, glide. n. s. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shaksp.

GLI'DER, gli'dûr. n. s. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glaunce into my heart did glide;
Hey ho the glider;
Therewith my soul was sharply gride,
Such wounds soon waxen wider. Spenser.

GLIKE, glike. n. s. [ȝliȝ. Saxon. See GLEEK.] A sneer; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.

Where 's the bastard's braves, and Charles his glikes. Shaksp.

To GLI'MMER, glim'mûr. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day.
Shaksp.

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
—And on my side it is so well apparel'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.
Shaksp.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray
Glimmers upon the pure and native day. Cowley.

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her. Milton.

See'st thou yon' dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful? Milton.

The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray,
Shot glimm'ring through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimm'ring socket dies. Gay.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lusty males. Pope.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were. Wotton.

The pagan priesthood was always in the druids; and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.

GLI'MMER, glim'mûr. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastick: talc, catsilver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMPSE, glimps. n. s. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far
Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milton.

Thousands of things which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimpse they ran? Milton.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires,
My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires,
Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryd.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the place. Cowley.

If I, celestial sire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great sire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern
Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milton.

Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

No man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of. Shaksp

To GLI'STEN, glis's'n.[472] v. n. [glittan, German.] To shine; to sparkle with light.

The bleating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistening earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Thomson.

The ladies' eyes glistened with pleasure. Richardson's Pamela.

To GLI'STER, glis'tûr. v. n. [glittan, German; glisteren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine. Spenser.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shaksp.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiack in his glistering coach. Shak.

All that glisters, is not gold. Shaksp.

You were more the eye and talk
Of the court to day, than all
Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Ben Jonson.

When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. 1 Maccabees.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.

GLI'STER, glis'tûr. n. s. [properly written clyster, from κλύζω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.

Now enters Bush with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown.

To GLI'TTER, glit'tûr. v. n. [glitinan, Saxon.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon.

Before the battle joins, from afar
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war. Dryd.

Scarce had'st thou time t' unsheath thy conqu'ring blade;
It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

In glitt'ring scenes o'er her own heart severe;
In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.

GLI'TTER, glit'tûr. n. s. [from the verb.] Lustre; bright show; splendour.

Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton.

Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in it. Collier

Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.

GLI'TTERAND, glit'tûr-ând. Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

GLI'TTERINGLY, glit'tûr-îng-lè. adv. [from glitter.] With shining lustre.

To GLOAR, glôre. v. a. [gloeren, Dutch.]

1. To squint; to look askew. Skinner.

2. In Scotland, to stare: as, what a gloar-and quean.

To GLOAT, glôte. v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for gloar.] To cast side glances as a timorous lover.

Teach every grace to smile in your behalf,
And her deluding eyes to gloat for you. Rowe.

GLO'BARD, glô'bârd. n. s. [from glow.] A glowworm.

GLO'BATED, glô'bâ-têd. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe; spherical; spheroidical.

GLOBE, glôbe. n. s. [globe, Fr. globus, Latin.]

1. A sphere; a ball; a round body; a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.

2. The terraqueous ball.

The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal enemy betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Stepney.

Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Cleaveland.

These are the stars,
But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find
Such figures as are in globes design'd. Creech.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd
With bright imblazoning, and horrent arms. Milt.

GLOBO'SE, glô-bôse'. adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical; round.

Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea; from one entire globose
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton.

Then form'd the moon
Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milton.

GLOBO'SITY, glô-bôs'ê-tê. n. s. [from globose.] Sphericity; sphericalness.

Why the same eclipse of the sun which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, 'till at last it appear not at all; no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray.

GLO'BOUS, glô'bûs.[314] adj. [globosus, Lat. When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.] Spherical; round.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globose earth in plain outspread
Such are the courts of God! Milton.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames and turbid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, or dreadful hiss,
Singeing the air. Philips.

GLO'BULAR, glôb'û-lâr.[535] adj. [globulus, Latin.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity. Grew.

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.
2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow sullen and inconversable. Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to dispel melancholy. Addison.

GLOO'MY, glōōm'ĕ. adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without
The growing miseries, which Adam saw
Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
To sorrow abandon'd. Milton.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,
Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,
Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome moon. Dryd.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Pope.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,
Herself a fairer flow'r, by gloomy Dis
Was gather'd. Milton.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLO'RIED, glŏ'rĭd.[282] adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not in use.

Old respect
As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,
My son now captive, hither hath inform'd
Your younger feet, while mine, cast back with age,
Came lagging after. Milton.

GLORIFICA'TION, glŏ-rĕ-fĕ-kā'shŭn. n. s. [glorification, French, from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

To GLO'RIFY, glŏ'rĕ-fī.[183] v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shaks.
Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne. Daniel

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shaks.
All nations shall glorify thy name. Psalms.

Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls. Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end: and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify. Spenser.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall,
Some odoriferous thing, or med'cinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. John.

Whom he justified, them he also glorified. Romans.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified: then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy. Pearson.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GLO'RIOUS, glŏ'rĕ-ŭs.[314] adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for all bravely stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Daniel.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendour of his celestial body, still made more glorious and majestick by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal Judge. Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
'Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine. Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addison.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight. Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness. Law.

GLO'RIOUSLY, glŏ'rĕ-ŭs-lĕ. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true criticks dare not mend. Pope.

GLO'RY, glŏ'rĕ. n. s. [gloire, French; gloria, Latin. Among the old poets, it was used sometimes as one syllable, glore.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest. Luke.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me in thy glory. Psalms.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high
Above all names in heav'n. Milton.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and intreat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life. Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.
Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought. Shakspeare.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,
There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

Your sex's glory, 'tis to shine unknown,
Of all applause be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matthew.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in pictures.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisdom.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To Glo'ry, glō'rē. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakspeare.

Your glorying is not good. 1 Corinthians.

Thou hast seen Mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Add.

This title of freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar. Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To Glose, glōze.[437] v. a. To flatter; to collogue. Hanmer. See To Gloze.

GLOSS, glŏs.[437] n. s. [γλωσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Howel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryd.

Explaining the text in short glosses was Acursius' method. Baker.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glow.

His iron coat all over-grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glistering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakspeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss. Shakspeare.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well, for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss,
Like that of oil. Chapman.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakspeare.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton.

To Gloss, glŏs. v. n. [gloser, French, from the noun.]

1. To comment.

Thou detain'st Briscis in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the gods' commands. Dryd.

2. To make sly remarks.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing, gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To Gloss, glŏs. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws
Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryd.

Glo'ssary, glŏs'sā-rē. n. s. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulachrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries. Stilling fleet.

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

Glossa'tor, glŏs-sā'tŭr. n. s. [glossateur, French; from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

Glo'sser, glŏs'sŭr. n. s. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

Glo'ssiness, glŏs'sē-nĕs. n. s. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

Glo'ssographer, glŏs-sŏg'grā-fŭr. n. s. [γλωσσα and γραφω.] A scholiast; a commentator.

Glo'ssography, glŏs-sŏg'grā-fē.[513] n. s. [γλωσσα and γραφω.] The writing of commentaries.

Glo'ssy, glŏs'sē. adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire
Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

His surcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE, glŭv.[166] n. s. [ȝlope, Sax. from klaffue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

They flew about like chaff i' th' wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,
Some could not stay their gloves to find. Drayton.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To Glove, glŭv. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enraged with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence, therefore, thou nice crutch;
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakspeare.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That alm'ner of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once removed;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glov'd. Cleaveland.

Glo'ver, glŭv'ŭr. n s. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife? Shakspeare.

To Glout, glŏŭt.[313] v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look sullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glowting round her rock, to fish she falls.
Chapman.

Glouting with sullen spight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look.
Garth.

To GLOW, glō.[324] v. n. [ȝlopan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But sithence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Their office upon a tawny front. Shakspeare.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to shew her innocence, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire.
Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows.
Addison.

How op'ning heav'ns their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow.
Smith.

Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?
Addison.

The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands.
Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays.
Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heavenly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like the ethereal glow'd the green expanse.
Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red, th' autumnal sun bestows
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole.
Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison.

Forc'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent
Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace;
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.
Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a sullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To GLOW, glō. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.
Shaksp.

GLOW, glō. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.
2. Vehemence of passion.
3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain.
Shaksp.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestick dignity of Raffaelle could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paulo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken. Reynolds.

GLO'WWORM, glō'wŭrm. n. s. [glow and worm.] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The honey-bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shak.

The glowworm shews the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shaksp.

A great light drowneth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.

The man who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Informed, he threw the worthless worm away.
Waller.

To GLOZE, glōze. v. n. [ȝlepan, Sax.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton.

So gloz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship.
Philips.

2. To comment. This should be gloss.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shaksp.

GLOZE, glōze. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shak.

2. Specious show; gloss. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are shaked with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney.

GLO'ZER, glōze'ŭr. n. s. [from gloze.] A flatterer.

GLUE, glū. n. s. [glu, French; gluten, Latin; glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a jelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon.

The driest and most transparent glue is the best. Moxon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse.
Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot.

To GLUE, glū. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee. Shak.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glueth a potsherd together. Ecclus.

The custom of crowning the holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvass over the head of the figure. Addison.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm.
Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honeypot are sensual men plunged in their lust and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase men's minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd
Her lips, and raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryd.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms.
Pope.

GLU'EBOILER, glū'bŏil-ŭr. n. s. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLU'ER, glū'ŭr.[98] n. s. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.

GLUM, glŭm. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.] Sullen; stubbornly grave.

Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then? Guardian.

To GLUT, glŭt. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio, Latin, to swallow; γλυζω.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

'Till cramm'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.

What may remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden.

I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd of the last, and eager of the new. Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcase glut the grave. Milton.

His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbuthnot.

5. To saturate.

The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.

GLUT, glůt. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorged foul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw. Milton.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben Jonson.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Woodward.

GLU'TINOUS, glů'tė-nůs. adj. [glutineux, Fr. from gluten, Lat.] Gluy; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects; the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Bacon.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbuthnot.

GLU'TINOUSNESS, glů'tė-nůs-nės. n. s. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids; which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.

GLU'TTON, glůt't'n.[170] [103] n. s. [glouton, French; from glutio, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsflesh baked. Bacon.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down
While the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibo's endless draught. Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Law.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.

To GLUTTONI'SE, glůt'tůn-ize. v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

GLU'TTONOUS, glůt'tůn-ůs. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down th' interest in their glutt'nous maws. Shaksp.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.

Well observe
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence
Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milton.

GLU'TTONOUSLY, glůt'tůn-ůs-lė. adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.

GLU'TTONY, glůt'tůn-ė. n. s. [glutonnie, French; from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small. Holyday.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton.

Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry: but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbuthnot.

GLU'Y, glů'ė. adj. [from glue.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spumous matter. Harvey.

With gluy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phænomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN, glin. n. s. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur. Erse; glenn, Scotish.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within those narrow corners and glyns under the mountain's foot. Spenser.

To GNAR, når. } v. n. [gnýrran, Sax.
To GNARL, nårl.[384] } knorren, Dut.] To growl; to murmur; to snarl.

When he 'gan to rear his bristles strong,
And felly gnar, until day's enemy
Did him appease. Spenser.

Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakspeare.

Gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shaksp.

The gnarring porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.

GNA'RLED, når'lėd. adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.

Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shaksp.

To GNASH, nåsh.[384] v. a. [knaschen, Dut.] To strike together; to clash.

The seer, who could not yet this wrath assuage,
Roll'd his green eyes, that sparkl'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden.

To GNASH, nåsh. v. n.

1. To grind or collide the teeth.

He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Psalms.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matthew.

2. To rage even to collision of the teeth; to fume; to growl.

His great iron teeth he still did grind,
And grimly gnash, threatening revenge in vain. Spenser.

They gnashed upon me with their teeth. Psalms.

They him laid
Gnashing for anguish, and despite and shame,
To find himself not matchless. Milton.

With boiling rage Atrides burn'd,
And foam betwixt his gnashing grinders churn'd. Dryden.

GNAT, nåt.[384] n. s. [gnæt, Saxon.]

1. A small winged stinging insect.

Her whip of cricket's bones, the lash of film;
Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat. Shaksp.

2. Any thing proverbially small.

Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. Matthew.

GNA'TFLOWER, nåt'flŏŏ-ůr. n. s. [gnat and flower.] A flower, otherwise called the beeflower.

GNA'TSNAPPER, nåt'snåp-půr. n. s. [gnat and snap.] A bird so called, because he lives by catching gnats.

Young children, who are try'd in
Go carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

Goad, gōde.[295] n. s. [ȝaƀ, Sax.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

Oft in his hardened hand a goad he bears. Pope.

To Goad, gōde. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.
2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate; to drive forward.

Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shaksp.
Goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues. Shaksp.
Of all that breathes the various progeny,
Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryden.

Goal, gōle.[295] n. s. [gaule, French, a long pole, set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels. Milton.
And the slope sun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing towards the other goal. Milton.

2. The starting post.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race? Dryden.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.
Each individual seeks a separate goal:
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.
So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for gaol or jail.

Goar, gōre.[295] n. s. [goror, Welsh.] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it. Skinner.

GOAT, gōte.[295] n. s. [ȝat, Saxon and Scotish.] A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goat, and slips of yew. Shaksp.
We Cyclops care not for your goat-fed Jove,
Nor other blest ones; we are better farre. Chapman.
You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their paper mills upon goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peacham.
The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,

The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love,
Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat 's repaid
With heav'n, and duty rais'd the pious maid.
Creech.

GOA'TBEARD, gōte'bērd. n. s. [goat and beard; barba caprī.] A plant.

GOA'TCHAFFER, gōte'tshà-fûr. n. s. An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

GOA'THERD, gōte'hêrd. n. s. [ʒaċ and hỳɲð, Sax. a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not thilk same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whose straying herd themself doth shroud
Among the bushes rank? Spenser.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack. Wotton.

GOA'TMARJORAM, gōte'mâr-jûr-ûm. n. s. The same with GOATBEARD.

GOA'TSMILK, gōts'mîlk. n. s. [goat and milk. This is more properly two words.]

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatsmilk may be necessary. Wiseman.

GOA'TMILKER, gōte'mîlk-ûr. n. s. [goat and milker.] A kind of owl so called from sucking goats. Bailey.

GOATS Rue, gōts'rōō. n. s. [galega.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

GOA'TSKIN, gōte'skîn. n. s. [goat and skin.]

Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine;
With water one, and one with sable wine. Pope.

GOATS-THORN, gōts'*th*ōrn. n. s. [goat and thorn.] An herb.

GOA'TISH, gōte'îsh. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality: as rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shaksp.

The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More.

GOB, gŏb. n. s. [gobe, French.] A small quantity. A low word.

Do'st think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money. L'Estrange.

GO'BBET, gŏb'bît. n. s. [gobe, French.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

Therewith she spew'd, out of her filthy maw,
A flood of poison, horrible and black,
Full of great lumps of flesh and gobbets raw.
Spenser.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,
And like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd
With gobbets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shak.

The cooks slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys.

The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw gobbets from his maw o'ercharg'd
With purple wine, and cruddled gore confus'd.
Addison.

To GO'BBET, gŏb'bît. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and gobbets up both together. L'Estrange.

To GO'BBLE, gŏb'bl. v. a. [gober, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Estrange.

Of last year's corn in barn great store;
Fat turkies gobbling at the door. Prior.

The time too precious now to waste,
And supper gobbled up in haste,
Again afresh to cards they run. Swift.

GO'BBLER, gŏb'bl-ûr. n. s. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GO'BLET, gŏb'lêt. n. s. [gobelet, French.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shaksp.

We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;
But free from surfeits our repose is sound. Denham.

Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught;
Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought.
Dryden.

GO'BLIN, gŏb'lîn. n. s. [French, gobeline, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elfe and goblin, is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by the nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elfe is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eilff uishon are phantoms of the night; and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named goboldi from which gobeline might be derived.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell! Shaksp.

To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
Art thou that traytor angel? Milton.

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elfinel, who overcame
The wicked gobbelines in bloody field;
But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Spenser.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps. Shaksp.

Mean time the village rouzes up the fire,
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn goes the goblin story round.
Thomson.

GOD, gŏd. n. s. [ʒoð, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John.

God above
Deal between thee and me. Shaksp.

All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all. Pearson.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. Exodus.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport. Shaksp.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracia's winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryden.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Philippians.

I am not Licio,
But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shaksp.

To GOD, gŏd. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Shaksp.

GO'DCHILD, gŏd'tshîld. n. s. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a christian.

GO'DDAUGHTER, gŏd'dâw-tûr. n. s. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor at baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GO'DDESS, gŏd'dĕs. n. s. [from god.] A female divinity.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father! Shaksp.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthy, thou a heavenly love. Shak.

I long have waited in the temple nigh,
Built to the gracious goddess Clemency;
But rev'rence thou the pow'r. Dryden.

From his seat the goddess born arose,
And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addis.

Modesty with-held the goddess' train. Pope.

GO'DDESS-LIKE, gŏd'dĕs-like. adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess.

Then female voices from the shore I heard;
A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd. Pope.

GO'DFATHER, gŏd'fâ-*th*ûr. n. s. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour, as to stand godfather to his child. Bacon.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

GO'DHEAD, gŏd'hĕd. n. s. [from god.]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true God.

Be content:
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift. Shaksp.

At the holy mount
Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne
Of godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure,
The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton.

So may thy godhead be confest,
So the returning year be blest. Prior.

2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.

Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shaksp.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown.
Dryden.

Go'DLESS, gŏd'lĕs. adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.

That godless crew
Rebellious. Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

Go'DLIKE, gŏd'like. adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild. Milton.

Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of saviour to mankind, and which way first
Publish his godlike office now mature. Milton.

That prince shall be so wise and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

Go'DLING, gŏd'ling. n. s. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with brass. Dryden.

Go'DLINESS, gŏd'lē-nĕs. n. s. [from godly.]

1. Piety to God.
2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hooker.

Go'DLY, gŏd'lē. adj. [from god.]

1. Pious toward God.

Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.

2. Good; righteous; religious.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Psalms.

The same church is really holy in this world, in relation to all godly persons contained in it by a real infused sanctity. Pearson.

Go'DLY, gŏd'lē. adv. Piously; righteously. By analogy it should be godlily, but the repetition of the syllable is too harsh.

The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hooker.

Go'DLYHEAD, gŏd'lē-hĕd. n. s. [from godly.] Goodness; righteousness. An old word.

For this, and many more such outrage,
I crave your godlihead to asswage
The rancorous rigour of his might. Spenser.

Go'DMOTHER, gŏd'mŭTH-ûr. n. s. [god and mother.] A woman who has undertaken sponsion in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

Go'DSHIP, gŏd'ship. n. s. [from god.] The rank or character of a god; deity; divinity.

Discoursing largely on this theme,
O'er hills and dales their godships came. Prior.

Go'DSON, gŏd'sŭn. n. s. [god and son.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father named? your Edgar? Shaks.

Go'DWARD, gŏd'wârd. adj. To Godward is toward God. So we read, Hac Arethusa tenus, for hactenus Arethusa.

And such trust have we through Christ to Godward. 2 Corinthians.

Go'DWIT, gŏd'wit. n. s. [ȝoð, good, and pita, an animal.] A bird of particular delicacy.

Nor ortelans nor godwits crown his board. Cowley.

Go'DYELD, Go'DYIELD, gŏd'yĕld. adv. [corrupted from God shield or protect.] A term of thanks. Not used.

Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godyeld us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakspeare.

GOEL, gō'ĕl. adj. [ȝolep, Sax.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the farthest, dry season or wet,
Hop roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goeler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tusser.

Go'ER, gō'ûr. n. s. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakspeare.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them
But goers backward. Shakspeare.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

3. The foot. Obsolete.

A double mantle, cast
A'thwart his shoulders, his faire goers grac'd
With fitted shoes. Chapman.

To Go'GGLE, gŏg'gl.[405] v. n. To look asquint.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scoul,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryden.

GOGGLE-EYED, gŏg'gl-ide.[283] adj. [ȝcezl eȝen, Saxon.] Squint-eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Ascham.

Go'ING, gō'ing. n. s. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylors tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenches suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see 't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakspeare.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight: that is the twentieth part of their going. Grew.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milt.

Go'LA, gō'lâ. n. s. The same with CYMATIUM.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show. Spectator.

GOLD, gōld or gōōld.[164] n. s. [ȝoið, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air, or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures; greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliantness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakspeare.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold fraught vessel which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakspeare.

Thou that so stoutly had resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shaks.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients, χρυση ἀφροδιτη; and animamque moresque aureos educit in astra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakspeare.

GOLD of Pleasure, gōld. n. s. [myagrum.] A plant.

Go'LDBEATER, gōld'bē-tûr. n. s. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.

Go'LDBEATER'S Skin, gōld'bē-tûrz-skĭn'. n. s. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer.

Go'LDBOUND, gōld'bound. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first. Shakspeare.

Go'LDEN, gôl'd'n.[103] adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were redhot steel to sear me to the brain. Shaksp.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour, glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold.
Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep.
Shakspeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born
Than wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Crashaw.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
Howe'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryd.

And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Golden russeting hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour.
Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakspeare.

That verse which they commonly called golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us.
Watts's Logick.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelesly, as they did in the golden world. Shakspeare.

Go'LDEN Saxifrage, gôl'd'n. n. s. [chrysoplenium.] An herb.

Go'LDENLY, gôl'd'n-lè. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.

My brother Jacques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. Shakspeare.

Go'LDFINCH, gôld'finsh. n. s. [ȝoldƿinc, Sax.] A singing bird so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a proud tailor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, Canary-birds, black-birds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes that hopp'd from side to side.
Dryden.

Go'LDFINDER, gôld'find-ûr. n. s. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his victuals through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or 't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.

Go'LDHAMMER, gôld'hâm-mûr. n. s. A kind of bird. Dict.

Go'LDING, gôld'ing. n. s. A sort of apple. Dict.

The gum of ivy is good to put into your goldsize, and other colours. Peacham.

Go'LDSMITH, gôld'smith. n. s. [ȝolꝺ and ƿmiꝺ, Sax.]

1. One who manufactures gold.

Neither chain nor goldsmith came to me.
Shakspeare.

2. A banker; one who keeps money for others in his hands.

The goldsmith or scrivener, who takes all your fortune to dispose of, when he has beforehand resolved to break the following day, does surely deserve the gallows. Swift.

Go'LDYLOCKS, gôld'è-lôks. n. s. [coma aurea, Lat.] A plant.

GOLL, gôl. n. s. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from pal or pol, whence pealꝺan, to handle or manage.] Hands; paws; claws. Used in contempt, and obsolete.

They set hands, and Mopsa put her golden golls among them; and blind fortune, that saw not the colour of them, gave her the pre-eminence.
Sidney.

GOME, gôme. n. s. The black grease of a cart-wheel. Bailey.

GOMPHO'SIS, gôm-fô'sîs. n. s. A particular form of articulation.

Gomphosis is the connexion of a tooth to its socket. Wiseman.

GO'NDOLA, gôn'dô-lâ. n. s. [gondole, French.] A boat much used in Venice; a small boat.

He saw did swim
Along the shore, as swift as glance of eye,
A little gondelay bedecked trim
With boughs and arbours woven cunningly.
Spenser.

In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica. Shakspeare.

As with gondolas and men, his
Good excellence the duke of Venice
Sails out, and gives the gulph a ring. Prior.

GONDOLI'ER, gôn-dô-lèêr'. n. s. [from gondola.] A boatman; one that rows a gondola.

Your fair daughter,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor. Shaksp.

GONE, gôn. part. preter. [from go. See To GO.]

1. Advanced; forward in progress.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, only by being put into broomlands. Mortimer.

The observator is much the brisker of the two, and, I think, further gone of late in lyes and impudence than his presbyterian brother. Swift.

2. Ruined; undone.

He must know 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister; we are gone else. Shaksp.

3. Past.

I'll tell the story of my life,
And the particular accidents gone by,
Since I came to this isle. Shakspeare.

His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thomson.

GORGE, gôrje. n. s. [gorge, Fr.]

1. The throat; the swallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver. Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Shaksp.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shaksp.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed. Not in use.

And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest. Spenser.

To Gorge, gôrje. v. n. [gorger, French.]

1. To fill up the throat; to glut; to satiate.

Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full. Shaksp.

He that makes his generation messes,
To gorge his appetite. Shaksp.

Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite. Dryden.

I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity. Addison.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Addison.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den. Addison.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the hook.

Go'rged, gôr'jėd. adj. [from gorge.] Having a gorge or throat.

Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shaksp.

GO'RGEOUS, gôr'jůs.[262] adj. [gorgias, old French. Skinner.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace! Shaksp.

As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer. Shaksp.

He bad them look upon themselves and upon their enemies, themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave. Hayward.

The gorgeous east, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold. Milt.

With gorgeous wings, the marks of sov'reign sway,
The two contending princes make their way. Dryd.

Go'rgeously, gôr'jůs-lė. adv. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.

The duke one solemn day, gorgeously clad in a suit all overspread with diamonds, lost one of them of good value. Wotton.

Go'rgeousness, gôr'jůs-nės. n. s. [from gorgeous.] Splendour; magnificence; show.

Go'rget, gôr'jėt. n. s. [from gorge.] The piece of armour that defends the throat.

He with a palsy fumbling on his gorget
Shakes in and out the rivet. Shaksp.

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him. Knolles.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jonson.

About his neck a threefold gorget
As rough as trebled leathern target. Hudibras.

Go'rgon, gôr'gůn.[166] n. s. [γοργω.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the sight turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.

Gorgons and hydras, and chimeras dire. Milton.

Why didst thou not encounter man for man,
And try the virtue of that gorgon face
To stare me into stature. Dryden.

GO'RMAND, gôr'mând. n. s. [gourmand, French.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.

To Go'rmandize, gôr'mân-dize. v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily; to feed ravenously.

Their gory sides the fresh wounds fiercely fret. Spenser.

Why dost thou shake thy gory locks at me?
Thou canst not say I did it. Shaksp.

2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain. Shaksp.

Go'shawk, gôs'hâwk. n. s. [ȝoꝛ, goose, and haꝛoc, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at goshawks sight aghast. Fairfax.

Go'sling, gôz'ling. n. s. [from goose.]

1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and waggling so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling. L'Estrange.

Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A katkin on nut-trees and pines.

GO'SPEL, gŏs'pĕl. n. s. [ȝoðeȝ ȝpel, or God's or good tidings; ἐυαγγελιον; soskel, skeal, suach, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.

All the decrees whereof scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation. Hammond.

How is a good christian animated and cheered by a stedfast belief in the promises of the gospel. Bentley.

2. Divinity; theology.

To Go'spel, gŏs'pĕl. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakspeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gospellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gospell'd
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave?
Shaksp.

Go'speller, gŏs'pĕl-ûr. n. s. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wickliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gospellers have had their golden days,
Have trodden down our holy Roman faith. Rowe.

Go'ssamer, gŏs'sâ-mûr. n. s. [gossipium, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of autumn. Hanmer.

A lover may bestride the gossamour,
That idles in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall, so light is vanity. Shaksp.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamere. Drayton.

The filmy gossamer now flits no more
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore. Dryd.

GO'SSIP, gŏs'sĭp. n. s. [from ȝoð and ȝyb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaude with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shaksp.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies.

2. A tippling companion.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab,
And when she drinks against her lips I bob. Shakspeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street,
The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

To Go'ssip, gŏs'sĭp. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaude with me.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shaksp.

His mother was a votress of my order,
And in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often hath she gossipt by my side. Shaksp.

The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossipings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke.

He gives himself up to an idle gossiping conversation. Law.

2. To be a pot-companion.

Nor met with fortune, other than at feast,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping. Shaksp.

Go'ssipred, gŏs'sĭp-rĕd. n. s. [gossipry, from gossip.]

Gossipred or compaternity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent. Davies.

Go'sting, gŏs'tĭng. n. s. [rubia.] An herb. Ainsworth.

Got, gŏt. The preterit of get.

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off. Shaksp.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though foul Thersites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd. Dryden.

These regions and this realm my wars have got;
This mournful empire is the loser's lot. Dryden.

When they began to reason about the means, how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark. Woodward.

Got, gŏt. The part. pass. of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do. Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world? Arbuthnot.

Thou wert from Ætna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder borne. Pope.

Go'tten, gŏt't'n. The part. pass. of get.

Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold. Job.

Few of them when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it. Temple.

Goud, gŏŭd. n. s. Woad; a plant. Dict.

Gove, gŏve. n. s. A mow. Tusser.

To Gove, gŏve. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, goff, or mow. An old word.

Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair,
Gove just in the barn, it is out of despair. Tusser.

To GO'VERN, gŭv'ûrn. v. a. [gouverner, French; guberno, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than in the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external. Spenser.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present against war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are govern all things in times of peace. Davenant.

The chief point which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions. Atterbury.

3. To manage; to restrain.

Go after her, she's desperate; govern her. Shakspeare.

4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax: as, amo governs the accusative case.

Listen, children, unto me,
And let this your lesson be,
In our language evermore
Words that govern go before. Mauger's Fr. Gr.

5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.

To Go'vern, gŭv'ûrn.[98] v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.

By that rule,
Your wicked atoms may be working now
To give bad counsel, that you still may govern. Dryden.

Go'vernable, gŭv'ûr-nâ-bl. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule; obedient; manageable.

The flexibleness of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe. Locke.

Go'vernance, gŭv'ûr-nânse. n. s. [from govern.]

1. Government; rule; management.

Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time; and rose up instead of his brother Judas. 1 Maccabees.

2. Control, as that of a guardian.

Me he knew not, neither his own ill,
'Till through wise handling, and fair governance,
I him recurred to a better will. Spenser.

What! shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloucester's governance? Shaksp.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

He likest is to fall into mischance,
That is regardless of his governance. Spenser.

Go'vernante, gŏ-vûr-nânt'. n. s. [gouvernante, French.] A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.

Go'verness, gŭv'ûr-nĕs. n. s. [gouvernesse, French, from govern.]

1. A female invested with authority.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound. Shaksp.

2. A tutoress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.

He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Danæ is painted, when she suddenly saw the golden shower. Sidney.

His three younger children were taken from the governess in whose hands he put them. Clarendon.

3. A tutoress; an instructress; a directress.

Great affliction that severe governess of the life of man brings upon those souls she seizes on. More.

Go'vernment, gŭv'ûrn-mĕnt. n. s. [gouvernement, French.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement, or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many. Temple.

No government can do any act to limit itself; the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute. Lesley.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall found

Their government, and their great senate chuse
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd.
Milton.

While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no division rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government.
Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.
Addison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one. Swift.

3. Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings.
Waller.

Those governments which curb not evils, cause;
And a rich knave 's a libel on our laws. Young.

4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage, blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain. Shaksp.
'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable. Shaksp.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part deprived of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death.
Shaksp.

6. Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.

Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them warded all with wary government.
Spenser.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

GO'VERNOUR, gŭv'ŭr-nŭr.[314] n. s. [gouverneur, French.]

It must be confest, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by providence, all are partakers. Hooker.

They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise. Bentley.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations. Psalms.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion. South.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governour,
Remains the censure of this hellish villain. Shak.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Eltham will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governour;
And for his safety there I'll best devise. Shaksp.

The great work of a governour is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.

During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governours and courtiers. Lesley.

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold all the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governour listeth. James.

There dies not above one of a thousand of the gout, although I believe that more die gouty.
Graunt.

Knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found. Dryden.

Most commonly a gouty constitution is attended with great acuteness of parts, the nervous fibres, both in the brain and in the other extremities, being delicate. Arbuthnot.

2. Relating to the gout.

There are likewise other causes of blood spitting; one is the settlement of a gouty matter in the substance of the lungs. Blackmore.

GOWN, gôûn. n. s. [gonna, Italian; gwn, Welsh and Erse.]

1. A long upper garment.

They make garments either short, as cloaks, or as gowns, long to the ground. Abbot.

If ever I said a loosebodied gown, sew me up in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread; I said a gown. Shaksp.

In length of train descends her sweeping gown,
And by her graceful walk the queen of love is known. Dryden.

2. A woman's upper garment.

I despise your new gown, 'till I see you dressed in it. Pope.

3. The long habit of a man dedicated to arts of peace, as divinity, medicine, law.

The benefices themselves are so mean in Irish counties, that they will not yield any competent maintenance for any honest minister, scarcely to buy him a gown. Spenser.

Girt in his Gabin gown the hero sat. Dryden.

Yet not superior to her sex's cares,
The mode she fixes by the gown she wears;
Of silks and china she's the last appeal;
In these great points she leads the common weal.
Young.

4. The dress of peace.

He Mars depos'd, and arms to gowns made yield;
Successful councils did him soon approve
As fit for close intrigues as open field. Dryden.

GO'WNED, gôûn'd.[362] adj. [from gown.] Dressed in a gown.

A noble crew about them waited round
Of sage and sober peers, all gravely gown'd.

To GRA'BBLE, grâb'bl.[405] v. n. [probably corrupted from grapple.] To grope; to feel eagerly with the hands.

My blood chills about my heart at the thought of these rogues, with their bloody hands grabbling in my guts, and pulling out my very entrails.
Arbuthnot.

To GRA'BBLE, grâb'bl. v. a. To lie prostrate on the ground. Ainsworth.

GRACE, grâse. n. s. [grace, Fr. gratia, Lat. graace, Erse.]

1. Favour; kindness.

If the highest love in no base person may aspire to grace, then may I hope your beauty will not be without pity. Sidney.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Shaksp.

Such as were popular

And well-deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.

Is this the reward and thanks I am to have for those many acts of grace I have lately passed? King Charles.

Yet those remov'd,
Such grace shall one just man find in his sight,
That he relents, not to blot out mankind. Milton.

He received all the graces and degrees, the proctorship and the doctorship could be obtained there. Clarendon.

Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace;
Then either of you knights may well deserve
A princess born. Dryden.

None of us, who now your grace implore,
But held the rank of sov'reign queen before. Dryden.

Proffer'd service I repaid the fair,
That of her grace she gave her maid to know
The secret meaning of this moral show. Dryden.

2. Favourable influence of God on the human mind.

The grace of God, that passeth understanding, keep your hearts and minds. Common Prayer.

Prevenient grace descending had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh
Regenerate grow instead. Milton.

3. Virtue; effect of God's influence.

Within the church, in the public profession and external communion thereof are contained persons truly good and sanctified, and hereafter saved; and together with them other persons void of all saving grace, and hereafter to be damned. Pearson.

How Van wants grace who never wanted wit. Pope.

4. Pardon; mercy.

Noble pity held
His hand awhile, and to their choice gave space
Which they would prove, his valour or his grace. Waller.

Bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee. Milton.

5. Favour conferred.

I should therefore esteem it a great favour and grace,
Would you be so kind as to go in my place. Prior.

6. Privilege.

But to return and view the cheerful skies,
To few great Jupiter imparts this grace. Dryden.

7. A goddess, by the heathens supposed to bestow beauty.

This forehead, where your verse has said
The loves delighted and the graces play'd. Prior.

8. Behaviour; considered as decent or unbecoming.

The same words in Philoclea's mouth, as from one woman to another, so as there were no other body by, might have had a better grace, and perchance have found a gentler receipt. Sidney.

Have I reason or good grace in what I do? Temple.

9. Adventitious or artificial beauty; pleasing appearance.

One lilac only, with a statelier grace,
Presum'd to claim the oak's and cedar's place;
And, looking round him with a monarch's care,
Spread his exalted boughs to wave in air. Harte.

Her purple habit sits with such a grace,
On her smooth shoulders, and so suits her face. Dryden.

To write and speak correctly gives a grace, and gains a favourable attention to what one has to say. Locke.

10. Natural excellence.

It doth grieve me, that things of principal excellency should be thus bitten at by men whom God hath endued with graces both of wit and learning, for better purposes. Hooker.

To some kind of men,
Their graces serve them but as enemies. Shaksp.

In his own grace he doth exalt himself
More than in your advancement. Shaksp.

The charming Lausus, full of youthful fire,
To Turnus only second in the grace
Of manly mien, and features of the face. Dryden.

11. Embellishment; recommendation; beauty.

Where justice grows, there grows the greater grace,
The which doth quench the brand of hellish smart. Spenser.

And graft my love immortal on thy fame. Pope.

To GRAFF, grâf. v. n. To practise insition.

In March is good graffing the skilful do know,
So long as the wind in the east do not blow:
From moon being changed, 'till past be the prime,
For graffing and cropping is very good time.
Tusser.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graft not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas, if you graft but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few. Bacon.

GRA'FTER, grâf'tûr. n. s. [from graff or graft.] One who propagates fruit by grafting.

I am informed, by the trials of the most skilful grafters of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which the insition is made. Evelyn.

GRAIL, grâle n. s. [from grêle, Fr.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was,
And, lying down upon the sandy grails,
Drank of the stream as clear as crystal glass.
Spenser.

GRAIN,[202] grâne. n. s. [graine, Fr. granum, Latin; grano, Italian, has all the following significations.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow, and which will not. Shaksp.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shaksp.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word.
Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shaksp.

Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,
Nor Phœbus fed his oxen on the plain. Dryden.

'Tis a rich soil, I grant you; but oftener covered with weeds than grain. Collier.

3. The seed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.

Thou exist'st on many thousand grains
That issue out of dust. Shaksp.

By intelligence
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shaksp.

5. The smallest weight, of which in physick twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a penny-weight; and so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

Unity is a precious diamond, whose grains as they double, twice double in their value. Holyday.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which ariseth, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces, and pounds. Holder.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weighing only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abateth of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water. Bacon.

His brain
Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain. Hudibras.

A military vest of purple flow'd,
Livelier than melibæan, or the grain
Of sarra, worn by kings and heroes old. Milton.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
All in a robe of darkest grain,
Flowing with majestick train. Milton.

The third, his feet
Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,
Sky-tinctur'd grain! Milton.

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour from the direction of fibres.

Your minds, preoccupied with what
You rather must do than with what you should do,
Made you against the grain to voice him consul.
Shaksp.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
I see to argue 'gainst the grain. Hudibras.

Old clients weary'd out with fruitless care,
Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;
Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,
Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire. Dryden.

13. The heart; the bottom.

The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.

The smaller the particles of cutting substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by breaking its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton.

GRA'INED, grân'd.[359] adj. [from grain.] Rough; made less smooth.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap consuming winter's drizzled snow,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shaksp.

Wherein my grandsire and my father sat. Shaksp.

Thy grandsire, and his brother, to whom fame
Gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world their name. Denham.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap
By active toil and military sweat. Prior.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Shaksp.

Above the portal, carv'd in cedar wood,

So mimick ancient wits at best,
As apes our grandsires in their doublets drest. Pope.

GRA'NDSON, grând'sûn. n. s. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store,
Give much to you, and to his grandsons more. Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes. Swift.

GRANGE, grânje. n. s. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, saith he; the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Ben Jonson.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakspeare.

The loose unletter'd hinds,
When for their teeming flocks and granges full
In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people, belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate; and of this sort were their granges and priories. Ayliffe.

GRA'NITE, grân'it.[140] n. s. [granit. Fr. from granum; Latin; because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moorstone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall it is found in prodigious masses, and brought to London, for the steps of publick buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. Hill.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addison.

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hooker.

I take it for granted, that though the Greek word which we translate saints, be in itself as applicable to things as persons; yet in this article it signifieth not holy things, but holy ones. Pearson.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree,
The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire
A moment elder than my rival fire,
Can chance of seeing first thy title prove? Dryd.

If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Addison.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. 1 Samuel.

Then hath God also to the gentiles granted repentance unto life. Acts.

Didst thou not kill this king?
——I grant ye.
—Do'st grant me, hedgehog? then grant me too,
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed. Shakspeare.

He heard, and granted half his prayer;
The rest the winds dispers'd. Pope.

GRANT, grânt. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Courtiers justle for a grant,
And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dryden.

3. In law.

A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politick; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the granter, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cowell.

All the land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be showed from her majesty. Spenser.

Not only the laws of this kingdom, but of other places, and the Roman laws, provide that the prince should not be deceived in his grants. Davenant.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hooker.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

Grapples you to the heart and love of us. Shaksp.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

For Hippagines, vessels for the transporting of horse, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grappling hooks to Anacharsis. Heylin.

GRA'PPLE, grâp'pl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Contest hand to hand; in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestlers hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus strove
With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose
Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd,
Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell.
Milton.

Or did his genius
Know mine the stronger demon, fear the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword. Dryden.

2. Close fight.

In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner. Shaksp.

3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.

But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd.
Dryden.

GRA'PPLEMENT, grâp'pl-mênt. n. s. [from grapple.] Close fight; hostile embrace. Not in use.

They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overthrew, and down him stay'd
With their rude hands and griesly grapplement.
Spenser.

GRA'SHOPPER, grâs'hôp-ûr. n. s. [grass and hop.] A small insect that hops in the summer grass. The cicada of the Latins is often by the poets translated grashopper, but improperly.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The cover of the wings of grashoppers. Shaksp.

Grashoppers eat up the green of the whole countries. Bacon.

Where silver lakes with verdant shadows crown'd,
Disperse a grateful chilness all around;
The grashopper avoids th' untainted air,
Nor in the midst of summer ventures there. Add.

The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grashoppers before them. Add.

GRATU'ITOUSLY, grā-tū'ē-tŭs-lē. adv. [from gratuitous.]

1. Without claim or merit.

2. Without proof.

I would know whence came this obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously tack to matter: this is to ascribe will and choice to these particles. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

GRATU'ITY, grā-tū'ē-tē. n. s. [gratuité, French, from gratuitous.] A present or acknowledgment; a free gift.

They might have pretended to comply with Ulysses, and dismissed him with a small gratuity. Broome on the Odyssey.

He used every year to present us with his almanack, upon the score of some little gratuity we gave him. Swift.

To GRA'TULATE, grătsh'ŭ-lāte or grăt'ŭ-lāte.[461] v. a. [gratulor, Latin.]

1. To congratulate; to salute with declarations of joy.

To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admires. Shaksp.

Whither away so fast?
——No farther than the Tower,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shaksp.

Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I gratulate at least my native clime,
That such a land which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden.

2. To declare joy for; to mention with expressions of joy.

Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy 'scape from rumour gratulate,
No less than if from peril; and devout,
Do beg thy care unto thy after state. Ben Jonson.

GRATULA'TION, grătsh-ŭ-lā'shŭn. n. s. [gratulatio, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Hooker.

The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Milton.

Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a christian desire, require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their fulness, only wish their continuance. South.

GRA'TULATORY, grătsh'ŭ-lā-tŭr-ē.[512] adj. [from gratulate.] Congratulatory; expressing congratulation.

GRAVE, grāve, a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon ȝræf, a grove or cave. Gibson.

GRAVE, grāve. n. s. [ȝræf, Saxon.] The place in the ground in which the dead are reposited.

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright,
In the church-way paths to glide. Shaksp.

Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave. Milton.

To walk upon the graves of our dead masters,
Is our own security. Denham.

A flood of waters would overwhelm all those fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet.

They were wont once a year to meet at the graves of the martyrs; there solemnly to recite their sufferings and triumphs, to praise their virtues, to bless God for their pious examples, for their holy lives, and their happy deaths. Nelson.

GRA'VE-CLOTHES, grāve'klōze. n. s. [grave and clothes.] The dress of the dead.

But of such subtle substance and unsound,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-clothes were unbound. Spenser.

And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes. John.

GRAVE-STONE, grāve'stōne. n. s. [grave and stone.] The stone that is laid over the grave; the monumental stone.

Timon, presently prepare thy grave;

GRAVE, gråve. adj. [grave, Fr. gravis, Latin.]

1. Solemn; serious; sober; not gay; not light or trifling.

To th' more mature,
A glass that featur'd them; and to the grave,
A child that guided dotards. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

We should have else desir'd
Your good advice, which still hath been both grave
And prosperous, in this day's council. Shaksp.

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed of mastives, or elegancy and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty. More.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity. Dryden.

Youth on silent wings is flown;
Graver years come rolling on. Prior.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave exceeds all power of face. Pope.

Folly painting humour, grave himself,
Calls laughter forth. Thomson.

They have as much reason to pretend to, and as much necessity to aspire after, the highest accomplishments of a christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among christian philosophers. Law.

2. Of weight; not futile; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others, the most celebrated for their virtue, as the gravest of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witness. Grew's Cosmol.

3. Not showy; not tawdry: as, a grave suit of clothes.

4. Not sharp of sound; not acute.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice, in some syllables, to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder.

GRA'VEL, grâv'êl.[99] n. s. [gravier, Fr. graveel, Dutch; gravel, Armorick.]

1. Hard sand; sand consisting of very small pebble-stones.

Gravel consists of flints of all the usual sizes and colours, of the several sorts of pebbles; sometimes with a few pyritæ, and other mineral bodies, confusedly intermixed, and common sand. Woodward.

His armour, all gilt, was so well handled, that it shewed like a glittering sand and gravel, interlaced with silver rivers. Sidney.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Providence permitted not the earth to spend itself in base gravels and pebbles, instead of quarries of stones. More.

So deep, and yet so clear, we might behold
The gravel bottom, and that bottom gold. Dryd.

The upper garden at Kensington was at first nothing but a gravel pit. Spectator.

Gravel walks are best for fruit-trees. Mortimer.

2. [gravelle, French.] Sandy matter concreted in the kidneys.

If the stone is brittle it will often crumble, and pass in the form of gravel: if the stone is too big to pass, the best method is to come to a sort of a composition or truce with it. Arbuthnot.

To GRA'VEL, grâv'êl. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pave or cover with gravel.

Moss groweth upon alleys, especially such as lie cold, and upon the north, as in divers terrasses; and again, if they be much trodden, or if they were at the first gravelled. Bacon.

2. To stick in the sand.

William the conqueror, when he invaded this island, chanced at his arrival to be gravelled; and one of his feet stuck so fast in the sand, that he fell to the ground. Camden.

3. To puzzle; to stop; to put to a stand; to embarrass.

I would kiss before I spoke.
—Nay, you were better speak first, and when you were gravelled for lack of matter you might take occasion to kiss. Shaksp.

The disease itself will gravel him to judge of it; nor can there be any prediction made of it, it is so sharp. Howel.

What work do our imaginations make with eternity and immensity? and how are we gravelled by their cutting dilemmas? Glanville.

Mat, who was here a little gravell'd,
Tost up his nose, and would have cavill'd. Prior.

4. [In horsemanship.] To hurt the foot with gravel confined by the shoe.

GRA'VELESS, gråve'lês. adj. [from grave.] Wanting a tomb; unburied.

A girl longs to tell her confidant that she hopes to be married in a little time, and asks her very gravely what she would have her to do. Spectator.

Wisdom 's above suspecting wiles;
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.

A formal story was very gravely carried to his excellency, by some zealous members. Swift.

Is 't not enough the blockhead scarce can read,
But must he wisely look, and gravely plead? Young.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRA'VENESS, gråve'nês. n. s. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

Youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his sables, and his weeds
Importing health and graveness. Shakspeare.

But yet beware of counsels when too full;
Number makes long disputes and graveness dull. Denham.

GRA'VEOLENT, grâ-vè'ô-lênt. adj. [graveolens, Latin.] Strong scented. Dict.

GRA'VER, grâ'vûr.[98] n. s. [graveur, Fr. from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.

If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the gravers dispose not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect. Dryden.

2. The style or tool used in graving.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Boyle.

The toilsome hours in diff'rent labour slide,
Some work the file, and some the graver guide. Gay's Fan.

GRAVI'DITY, grâ-vîd'è-tè. n. s. [gravidus, Latin.] Pregnancy; state of being with child.

GRA'VING, grâ'vîng. n. s. [from grave.] Carved work.

Skilful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chronicles.

To GRA'VITATE, grâv'è-tâte. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursu'd,
That matter is with active force endu'd,
That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate, assert. Blackmore.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITA'TION, grâv-è-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to the terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRA'VITY, grâv'è-tè. n. s. [gravitas, Lat. gravité, Fr.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unsolveable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specifick gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastick tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hooker.

3. Seriousness; solemnity.

There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shaksp.

Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shaksp.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. Law.

GRA'VY, grā'vē. n. s. The serous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

Meat we love half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey.

There may be stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbuthnot.

GRAY, grā. [adj. [ȝræȝ Saxon; grau, Danish; graau, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray headed even,
Like a sad votarist in Palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grisly, and many others. Bacon.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton.

Anon
Gray headed men and grave, with warriours mix'd, Assemble. Milton.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glanville.

Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!
Art thou to learn that in another's gold
Lie charms resistless? Dryden.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,
And Bacon trembling for his brazen head. Pope.

3. Dark like the opening or close of day; of the colour of ashes.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Cæsilia, that is, gray eyed. Camden.

The gray ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,
Chequ'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light. Shaksp.

I'll say yon gray is not the morning's eye;
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shaksp.

Soon as the gray ey'd morning streaks the skies,
And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies. Gay.

GRAY, grā. n. s. A gray colour.

Down sunk the sun, the closing hour of day
Came onward, mantled o'er with dusky gray. Parnel.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.
—Graybeard, thy love doth freeze. Shaksp.

Have I in conquest stretcht mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Shaksp.

GRA'YLING, grā'ling. n. s. [thymallus.] The umber, a fish.

The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner: he is of a fine shape, his flesh white, and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a fish as the trout, nor so good to eat. Walton.

GRA'YNESS, grā'nēs. n. s. [from gray.] The quality of being gray.

To GRAZE, grāze. v. n. [from grass.]

1. To eat grass; to feed on grass.

The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck. Shaksp.

Graze where you will, you shall not house with me. Shaksp.

Leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He sought himself some hospitable house. Dryden.

The more ignoble throng
Attend their stately steps, and slowly graze along. Dryden.

2. To supply grass.

Physicians advise their patients to remove into airs which are plain champaigns, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath. Bacon.

The sewers must be kept so as the water may not stay too long in the spring; for then the ground continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze to purpose that year. Bacon.

A third sort of grazing ground is that near the sea, which is commonly very rich land. Mortimer.

3. To move on devouring.

As every state lay next to the other that was oppressed, so the fire perpetually grazed. Bacon.

And threaten present blusters. Shaksp.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Add.

2. Sourly; sullenly.

The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Shaksp.

GRI'MNESS, grîm'nês. n. s. [from grim.] Horrour; frightfulness of visage.

To GRIN, grîn. v. n. [ȝrennian, Saxon; grinnen, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips either in anger or in mirth.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st. Shaksp.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away. Shaksp.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning, and only showing their teeth. Stilling fleet.

A lion's hide he wears:
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryd.
They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grinn'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view. Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth,
To grinning laughter, and to frantick mirth. Prior.

Fools grin on fools, and stoicklike support,
Without one sigh the pleasures of a court. Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.

I like not such grinning honour as sir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for and there's an end. Shaksp.

GRIN, grĭn. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and showing them.

He laughs at him, in 's face too.
—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryd.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he showed twenty teeth at a grin. Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and arguments; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is grin and grimace. Watts.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?
One is just out, and one is lately in. Young.

GRIN, grĭn. n. s. [ȝrỳn, ȝỳrene, Sax.] A snare; a trap.

Like a birde that hasteth to his gryn
Not knowinge the perile. Chaucer.

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Matthew.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shaksp.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living rational meal? Bentley.

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy sithe is dull; whet it, for shame:
No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it
Twenty to one too sharp do find it. Herbert.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryd.

3. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstanding, 'gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Spenser.

Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbuthnot.

4. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon.

5. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for griding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings and of grinding pains,
My throws come thicker, and my cries encreas'd. Dryden.

To GRIND, grīnd. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses. Milton.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.

Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Rowe.

GRI'NDER, grīnd'ûr.[98] n. s. [from grind.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

2. The instrument of grinding.

His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.

Now exhort
Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Philips.

3. [ȝrind-toðar.] The back teeth, the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the fore-teeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon.

He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molares, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliments. Ray.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which do not ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbuthnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at the sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryd.

Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.

GRI'NDLESTONE, grĭn'dl-stōne. } n. s.
GRI'NDSTONE, grīnd'stōne. }
[from grind and stone.] The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindlestones. Ben Jonson.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, and to whet their natural faculties. Hammond.

Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone 'till bright. Moxon.

GRI'NNER, grĭn'nûr.[98] n. s. [from grin.] He that grins.

The frightful'st grinner
Be the winner. Addison.

GRI'NNINGLY, grĭn'nĭng-lē. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

GRIP, grĭp. n. s. A small ditch. Ains.

To GRIPE, gripe. v. a. [greifan, Gothick; ȝripan, Saxon; grijpen, Dutch; gripp, Scotish.]

1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkl'd brows. Shaksp.

2. To hold hard.

He seiz'd the shining bough with griping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold. Dryd.

3. [grippen, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.

You took occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the gen'ral sway into your hands. Shaksp.

4. To close; to clutch.

Unlucky Welsted! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster. Pope.

5. To pinch; to press; to squeeze.

A wond'rous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey. Spenser.

And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that sought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood. Dryden.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryden.

To GRIPE, gripe. v. n.

1. To feel the colick; to have the belly-ache.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us. Locke.

2. To pinch; to catch at money meanly.

It is mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by griping, made them less, and grew stark beggars. Fell.

GRIPE, gripe. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high,
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy. Spenser.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand. Shaksp.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falshood as with labour. Shaksp.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear my lord,
Command my service. Shaksp.

I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd. Dryden.

2. Squeeze; pressure.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryden.

3. Oppression; crushing power.

I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master. Shaksp.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.

Adam, at the news
Heart struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound! Milton.

Can'st thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for tender offices of love,

Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty? Otway.

5. [In the plural.] Bellyache; colick.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting; and the icterical have a great sourness and gripes with windiness. Floyer.

GRI'PER, grî'pûr.[98] n. s. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer; extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are professed usurers, gripers, monsters of men, and harpies. Burton.

GRI'PINGLY, grî'ping-lè. adv. [from griping.] With pain in the guts.

Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work gripingly. Bacon.

GRI'PLE, grî'pl. n. s. A greedy snatcher; a griping miser. Spenser.

GRI'SAMBER, grîs'âm-bûr. n. s. Used by Milton for ambergrise.

Beasts of chace, or fowl of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd,
Grisamber steam'd. Milton.

GRISE, grise. n. s. [See GREECE, as it should be written.] A step, or scale of steps.

Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour. Shaksp.

GRI'SKIN, grîs'kîn. n. s. [grisgin, roast meat, Irish.] The vertebræ of a hog broiled.

GRI'SLY, grîz'lè. adj. [ȝpiꝛlu, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grisly locks, long growen and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Spenser.
Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see. Spenser.
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death. Shaksp.
Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon. Milton.
For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron. Milton.
The beauteous form of fight,
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly sight. Dryden.
In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
The king of terrors raging in thy race. Dryden.
Thus the grisly spectre spoke again Dryden.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly wound. Dryden.
So rushes on his foe the grisly bear. Addison.

GRIST, grîst. n. s. [ȝpiꝛt, Sax.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack water. Tusser.
A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at scholar's hall. Miller.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill. Ayliffe.

GRI'STLE, gris'sl.[472] n. s. [ȝpiꝛtle, Sax.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the œsophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annulary gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or entire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray.

GRI'STLY, grîs'slè. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung pipes. Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures. More.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like women's fans. Ray.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.

Each pipe distinguished by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore.

GRIT, grît. n. s. [ȝpÿtta, ȝpeot, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.
2. Oats husked or coarsely ground.
3. Sand; rough hard particles.

Silesian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap. Grew.

The sturdy pear tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and restive marle. Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass.

One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt water, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water. This is the pulvis puteolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plaisters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocollo of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax. The ferrugineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy. Hill.

GRI'TTINESS, grît'tè-nês. n. s. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fuller's-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Mortimer.

GRI'TTY, grît'tè. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton.

GRI'ZELIN, grîz'lîn. n. s. [more properly gridelin. See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate. Temple.

GRI'ZZLE, grîz'zl.[405] n. s. [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face! Shak.

GRI'ZZLED, grîz'zl'd.[359] adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head. Shak.
His beard was grizzled: no.
—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shaksp.
His hair just grizzled,
As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth their asses ears to hide. Dryden.

GRI'ZZLY, grîz'zlè. adj. [from gris, gray, Fr.] Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turned to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon.

To GROAN, grône.[295] v. n. [ȝpanan, Saxon; gronen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shaksp.
Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job.
Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisdom.
So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton.
Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.
On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope.

GROAN, grône. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness, or weariness.

Alas, poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd! Shaksp.
I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.
Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play. Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. King Lear.

GRO'ANFUL, grône'fûl. adj. [groan and full.] Sad; agonizing. Not used.

Adown he kest it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groanful sound. Spenser.

GROAT, grôwt.[295] n. s. [groot, Dutch; grosso, Italian.]

1. A piece valued at four pence.
2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shaksp.
I dare lay a groat,
A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden.
Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Ainsworth.

GRO'CER, grô'sûr.[98] n. s. [This should be written grosser, from gross, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig; which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and plums and spices for gain. Watts.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove.
Garth.

GRO'CERY, grō-sûr-ē. n. s. [from grocer.] Grocer's ware, such as tea, sugar, raisins, spice.

His troops being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GRO'GERAM, GRO'GRAM, GRO'GRAN, grōg'rûm. n. s. [gros, grain, Fr. grossograna, low Latin. Ainsworth.] Stuff woven with a large woof and a rough pile.

Certes they 're neatly cloath'd: I of this mind am,
Your only wearing is your grogeram. Donne.

Natolia affords great store of chamelots and grograms. Sandys.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grogram, or the like. Brown.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in grogram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison.

Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas Madam in her grogeram gown. Swift.

GROIN, grōin. n. s. [of uncertain derivation.] The part next the thigh.

Antipleus, a sonne of Priam threw
His lance at Ajax through the preasse, which went by him, and flew
On Leucus, wise Ulysses' friend: His groine it smote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,
And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pass'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound
Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground.
Dryden.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be sin. Hooker.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, which, though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet disorders the heart, and supports in it sensuality and dulness. Law.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross
You love my son: invention is asham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say thou dost not. Shaksp.

Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shaksp.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the grossest sensuality, we cannot but admire it? Sprat.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge.

But she dares never boast the present hour,
So gross the cheat, it is beyond her pow'r. Young.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray the roseat bloom
Of beauty blasting, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature gross. Thomson.

5. Dense; not refined; not attenuated; not pure.

It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the grosser, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,
The grosser feeds the purer; earth the sea;
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden.

Or suck the mists in grosser air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.

If she doth then the subtile sense excel,
How gross are they that drown her in her blood?
Davies.

And in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear.
Milton.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare stating of the question with perspicuity and justness, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; not delicate.

Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Wotton.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.

His stature was of just height and all proportionate dimensions, avoiding the extremes of gross and meager. Fell.

GROSS, grōse. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd that with disordered haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely we past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one.
Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freeholder.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of publick blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hooker.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbot.

There is confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God; and this may be either general or particular. The general is, when we only confess in gross that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins. Duty of Man.

Remember, son,
You are a general; other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross. Shaksp.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakspeare.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves into many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things. Bacon.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [grosse, French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GRO'SSLY, grōse'lė. adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shaksp.

And thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shakspeare.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?
—Speak not so grossly. Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If I speak of light and rays as endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people would be apt to frame. Newton's Opticks.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GRO'SSNESS, grōse'nės. n. s. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; spissitude; density; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shaksp.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shaksp.

The cause from the epilepsy of the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon.

Then all this earthly grossness quit;
Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.

This being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opticks.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, makes known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wise men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shakspeare.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears. Clarissa.

GROT, grôt. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Ital.] A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.
Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTE'SQUE, grō-tėsk'. adj. [grotesque, French; grotesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Access deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to public view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope.

GRO'TTO, grôt'tō. n. s. [grotte, Fr. grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grottos run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward.

GROVE, grōve. n. s. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon me thought
The wood began to move:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales:
Thrice happy isles! Milton.

Banish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

To GRO'VEL, grōv'v'l.[102] v. n. [grufde, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Spenser.

What sees't thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world!
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same. Shaksp.

Oke mast and beech, and cornell fruit they eat,
Groveling like swine on earth, in fowlest sort. Chapman.

Now they lie
Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milt.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milton.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence; not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim whate'er he can express;
His groveling sense will shew my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND, grōůnd.[318] n. s. [ȝrunb, Saxon; grondt, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action. The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never say under earth, but under ground.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Exodus.

Man to till the ground
None was, and from the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton.

From the other hill
To their fix'd station all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milton.

A black bituminous gurge
Boils up from under ground. Milton.

And yet so nimbly he would bound,
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.

I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jeremiah.

There was a dew upon all the ground. Judges.

They summ'd their wings, and soaring th' air sublime,
With clangs despis'd the ground. Milton.

Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Land; country.

The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory

On heav'nly ground they stood, and from the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss. Milton.

With these came they, who, from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Baalim and Ashtaroth. Milton's Par. Lost.

5. Estate; possession.

Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbour's grounds:
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dryd.

6. Land occupied.

The sea o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Milton.

7. The floor or level of the place.

Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground. 2 Samuel.

9. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterward painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours. Hakewill.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden.

10. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

O'er his head
A well-wrought heaven of silk and gold was spread,
Azure the ground, the sun in gold shone bright. Cowley.

Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.

Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine,
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.

11. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

12. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest.

Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

13. The first principles of knowledge.

The concords will easily be known, if the fore-grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Pref. to Accidence.

Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.

The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolved; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it not irresistibly. Hammond.

After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton.

14. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.

He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.

Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney.

The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original cause from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.

In the solution of the Sabbatizer's objection, my method shall be to examine, in the first place, the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.

Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.

Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon.

Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscommon.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.

It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not real ground for it. Wilkins.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.

Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kettlewell.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increase of the professors of christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

15. The field or place of action.

Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;
And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Dan.

16. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,
While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryd.

He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Seneffe. Dryden.

17. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Ev'ning mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marish glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels,
Homeward returning. Milton.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.

18. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never had then sprung. Shaksp.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shaksp.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the other. Atterbury.

19. State of progress or recession.

I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace and wearies herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden.

20. The foil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shaksp.

To GROUND, gröund. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fix on the ground.

2. To found, as upon cause, reason, or principle.

Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.

The church of England walking in the good and old way of the orthodoxal primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's day, and of other christian holidays, upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment. White.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.

If your own actions on your will you ground,
Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryd.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Ephesians.

GROUND, gröund. The pret. and part. pass. of grind.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground
And polish'd, looks a diamond. Hudibras.

GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.

GRO'UND-ASH, gröund-åsh'. n. s. A sapling of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw,
Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large strait shoots, which they call ground-ash. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-BAIT, gröund'bäte. n. s. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Walton.

GRO'UND-IVY, gröund-i'vė. n. s. [hedera terrestris, Lat.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.

Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GRO'UND-OAK, gröund-öke'. n. s. [ground and oak.]

If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the cooper's trade for the making of hoops, either of hasel or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-PINE, gröund-pine'. n. s. [chamæpitys, Latin.] A plant.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road sides. Hill.

GROU'ND-PLATE, gröund'plåte. n. s. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortices and tenons. In these also are mortices made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the staircase and chimney way, and the binding joist. Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the ground plates, breast summers, and beams. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-PLOT, gröund'plöt. n. s.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where canst thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.

GUAIA'CUM, gwá'â-kům.[340] n. s. A physical wood.

Guaiacum is attenuant and aperient. It is excellent in many chronick cases, and was once famous for curing the venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it improperly called gum guaiacum. Hill.

GUARANTE'E, gâr'rân-tė'.[332] n. s. [guarant,

French.] A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence. South.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison.

An oath is a promise made to God, and God is our superior, superior to kings. And he is also the guarantee and avenger of all breach of faith and injustice. Lesley.

To GUA'RANTY, gâr'rân-tè.[92] v. a. [garantir, Fr.] To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

To GUARD, gyârd.[92 160] v. a. [garder, French; from our word ward, the w being changed by the French into g; as Galles for Wales.

1. To watch by way of defence and security.
2. To protect; to defend.

Naked the graces guarded you from all
Dangers abroad, and now your thunder shall. Waller.

Your power you never use, but for defence,
To guard your own or others innocence. Dryd.

Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard the shore from an expected foe. Dryd.

The port of Genoa is very ill guarded against the storms. Addison.

3. To preserve by caution.

One would take care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection, because it is that which our nature very strongly inclines us to. Addison.

4. To provide against objections.

Homer has guarded every circumstance with as much caution as if he had been aware of the objection. Broome.

5. To adorn with lists, laces, or ornamental borders. Obsolete.

Give him a livery
More guarded than his fellows. Shaksp.

See a fellow
In a long motley, guarded with yellow. Shaksp.

To GUARD, gyârd.[332] v. n. To be in a state of caution or defence.

There are cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier.

To guard against such mistakes, it is necessary to acquaint ourselves a little with words. Watts.

GUARD, gyârd.[92 160] n. s. [garde, French; ward, Teutonick.]

1. A man, or body of men, whose business is to watch by way of defence or prevention.

The guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard chamber. 1 Kings.

Up into heav'n, from paradise, in haste
Th' angelick guards ascended, mute, and sad,
For man. Milton.

They miss'd courts, guards, a gay and num'rous train,
Our judges like our laws were rude and plain. Cowley.

With lifted hands, and gazing eyes,
His guards behold him soaring through the skies. Dryden.

He must be trusted to his own conduct, since there cannot always be a guard upon him, except what you put into his own mind by good principles. Locke.

They, usurping arbitrary power, had their guards and spies, after the practice of tyrants. Swift.

2. A state of caution; a state of vigilance.

The great alteration which he made in the state ecclesiastical, caused him to stand upon his guard at home. Davies.

Temerity puts a man off his guard. L'Estrange.

It is wisdom to keep ourselves upon a guard. L'Estrange.

Now he stood collected and prepar'd;
For malice and revenge had put him on his guard. Dryden.

Others are cooped in close by the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant. Locke.

Men are always upon their guard against an appearance of design. Smalridge.

3. Limitation; anticipation of objection; caution of expression.

They have expressed themselves with as few guards and restrictions as I. Atterbury.

4. An ornamental hem, lace, or border. Obsolete.
5. Part of the hilt of a sword.

GUA'RDAGE, gyâr'dâge.[90] n. s. [from guard.] State of wardship. Obsolete.

A maid so tender, fair and happy,
Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou. Shaksp.

GUA'RDER, gyâr'dûr.[98] n. s. One who guards. Ainsworth.

GUA'RDIAN, gyâr'dè-ân or gyâr'jè-ân.[293 294 376] n. s. [guardien, French, from guard.]

1. One that has the care of an orphan; one who is to supply the want of parents.

I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian. Shaks.

When perjur'd guardians, proud with impious gains,
Choak up the streets, too narrow for their trains! Dryden.

Hocus, with two other of the guardians, thought it their duty to take care of the interest of the three girls. Arbuthnot.

2. One to whom the care and preservation of any thing is committed.

I gave you all,
Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number. Shakspeare.

It then becomes the common concern of all that have truth at heart, and more especially of those who are appointed guardians of the Christian faith, to be upon the watch against seducers. Waterland.

3. A repository or storehouse. Not used.

Where is Duncan's body?
——Carried to Colmeskill,
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones. Shakspeare.

GUA'RDIAN of the Spiritualities, gyâr'dè-ân. He to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see. He may be either guardian in law, or jure magistratûs, as the archbishop is of any diocese within his province; or guardian by delegation, as he whom the archbishop or vicar-general doth for the time depute. Cowell.

GUA'RDIAN, gyâr'dè-ân.[293 376] adj. Performing the office of a kind protector or superintendent.

My charming patroness protects me unseen, like my guardian angel; and shuns my gratitude like a fairy, who is bountiful by stealth, and conceals the giver when she bestows the gift. Dryd

Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,
The promis'd father of a future age. Pope.

Meanwhile Minerva, in her guardian care,
Shoots from the starry vaults through fields of air. Pope.

GUA'RDIANSHIP, gyâr'dè-ân-ship. n. s. [from guardian.] The office of a guardian.

The curate stretched his patent for the cure of souls, to a kind of tutelary guardianship over goods and chattels. L'Estrange.

This holds true, not only in losses and indignities offered to ourselves, but also in the case of trust, when they are offered to others who are committed to our care and guardianship. Kettlewell.

Theseus is the first who established the popular state in Athens, assigning to himself the guardianship of the laws, and chief command in war Swift.

GUA'RDLESS, gyârd'lès. adj. [from guard.] Without defence.

So on the guardless herd, their keeper slain,
Rushes a tyger in the Lybian plain. Waller.

A rich land, guardless and undefended, must needs have been a double incitement. South.

GUA'RDSHIP, gyârd'ship. n. s. [from guard.]

1. Care; protection.

How bless'd am I, by such a man led!
Under whose wise and careful guardship
I now despise fatigue and hardship. Swift.

2. [guard and ship.] A king's ship to guard the coast.

GUAIA'VA, gwâ-â'vâ. } n s. An Ameri-
GUA'VA, gwâ'vâ } can fruit. The fruit, says Sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholesome. They have only this inconvenience, that being very astringent, they stop up the belly, if taken in great quantities. Miller.

GUBERNA'TION, gû-bèr-nâ'shûn. n. s. [gubernatio, Lat.] Government; superintendency; superiour direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts.

GU'DGEON, gûd'jûn.[289] n. s. [goujon, Fr.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbots dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

2. A man easily cheated.

This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

3. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allurement: gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shaksp.

GUE'RDON, gêr'dûn.[166] n. s. [guerdon, gardon, Fr.] A reward; a recompense, in a good and bad sense. Not in use.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while
Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,
By him who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to be. Spenser.

He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villanies. Knolles

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
And slits the thin-spun life. Milton

To GUESS, gès.[336] v. a. [ghissen, Dut.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.
Shaksp.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.
—Hum! I guess at it. Shaksp.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleaseth not to give impediment?
Raleigh.

There issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and dress,
To be Taxcallan enemies I guess. Dryden.

The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferiour deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God. Stillingfleet.

To GUESS, gĕs. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS, gĕs. n. s. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.
Shaksp.

His guesse was usually, as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell.

A poet must confess
His art's like physick, but a happy guess. Dryden.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.

No man is blest by accident, or guess,
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUE'SSER, gĕs'sûr. n. s. [from guess.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous.
Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crotchet,
To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
To give thee lawn sleeves, a mitre, and rochet,
Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUE'SSINGLY, gĕs'sĭng-lè. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.

I have a letter guessingly set down. Shaksp.

GUEST, gĕst.[336] n. s. [ȝeꝑt, ȝirt, Sax. gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Luke.

Methinks a father
Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table. Shaksp.

Tell my royal guest
I add to his commands my own request. Dryden.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O desarts, desarts! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting? Sidney.

Those happier smiles
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shaksp.

GUE'STRITE, gĕst'rite. n. s. [from guest and rite.] Offices due to a guest.

Ulysses so dear
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not beare
In his black fleete that guestrite to the war.
Chapman.

GU'ESTCHAMBER, gĕst'tshâm-bûr. n. s. [guest and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? Mark.

To GUGGLE, gûg'gl.[405] v. n. [gorgolaire, Italian.] To sound as water running with intermissions out of a narrow mouthed vessel.

GUI'DAGE, gyi'dâje.[90] n. s. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainsw.

GUI'DANCE, gyi'dânse. n. s. [from guide.] Direction; government.

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men. Spenser.

As to those who live under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead would persuade them.
Atterbury.

Particular application must be left to christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

This to the young—but thy experienc'd age
Wants not the guidance of a former sage. Sewell.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

To GUIDE, gyide.[180] v. a. [guider, Fr.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth. John.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whosoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.
South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims, when nothing but the interest of this world guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs are not to be put up. Kettlewell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me.
Psalms.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house.
Decay of Piety.

GUIDE, gyide. n. s. [guide, Fr. from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisdom.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance
So far to make us wish for ignorance?
And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than, led by a false guide, to err by day? Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,
And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryd.

GUI'DELESS, gyide'lĕs. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governour or superintendent.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.
Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray.
Dryden.

GUI'DER, gyi'dûr.[98] n. s. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide. Obsolete.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shaksp.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chirurgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUI'DON, gyi'dûn. n. s. [Fr.] A standard-bearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD, gild.[341] n. s. [ȝildȝcip, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.] A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word gild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution. Cowell.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords. Shak.

In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art. Hale.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's triple bolted gate,
For their defrauded absent foals they make
A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope.

GUILE, gyile.[341] n. s. [guille, gille, old French, the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and signs she did abhor.
Spenser.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shaksp.

We may, with more successful hope, resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.

Nor thou his malice and false guile contemn:

Subtile he needs must be who could seduce
Angels. Milton.

GUI'LEFUL, gyīle'fûl. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile. Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd. Shaksp.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton.

The guileful phantom now forsook the shrowd,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.

I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay. Shaksp.

GUI'LEFULLY, gyīle'fûl-ē. adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.

To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milton.

GUI'LEFULNESS, gyīle'fûl-nĕs. n. s. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning.

GUI'LELESS, gyīle'lĕs. adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness; simply honest.

GUI'LER, gyīle'ûr. n. s. [from guile. See BEGUILE.] One that betrays into danger by insidious practices.

But he was wary wise in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey. Spenser.

GUILT, gĭlt.[341] n. s. [ȝylc, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon.

When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond.

2. A crime; an offence.

Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shaksp.

GUI'LTILY, gĭlt'ē-lē. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die. Shaksp.

GUI'LTINESS, gĭlt'ē-nĕs. n. s. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness. Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terrour of thy guiltiness. Shaksp.

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaksp.

GUI'LTLESS, gĭlt'lĕs. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shaksp.

Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shaksp.

Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Numbers.

Thou, who dost all thou wishest at thy will,
And never willest aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.

The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryden.

Thou knowest how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.

GUI'LTLESSLY, gĭlt'lĕs-lē. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.

GUI'LTLESSNESS, gĭlt'lĕs-nĕs. n. s. [from guiltless.] Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.

GUI'LTY, gĭlt'tē. adj. [ȝyltiȝ, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shaksp.

Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence death? Shaksp.

We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Genesis.

With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.

Farewel the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans. Dryden.

There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.

2. Wicked; corrupt.

All the tumult of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson.

GUI'NEA, gĭn'nē.[341] n. s. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind:
Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.

GU'INEADROPPER, gĭn'nē-drŏp'pûr. n. s. [guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards. Gay.

GUI'NEAHEN, gĭn'nē-hĕn. n. s. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.

GUI'NEAPEPPER, gĭn'nē-pĕp'pûr. n. s. [capsicum, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

GUI'NEAPIG, gĭn'nē-pĭg. n. s. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

GUISE, gyīze.[160 341] n. s. [The same with wise, guise, French; ƿiȝa, Saxon, the ƿ or w being changed, as is common, into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour

His own sire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.

Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wise. Fairf.

Lo you! here she comes; this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shaksp.

They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton.

Back, shepherds, back:
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise
As mercury did first devise. Milton.

Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. More.

2. Practice; custom; property.

I have drunke wine past my usual guise;
Strong wine commands the foole, and moves the wise. Chapman.

This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. Ben Jonson.

The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To slight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.

When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.

The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.

GUITA'R, gĭt-tär'.[341] n. s. [ghitara, Italian; guiterre, French.] A stringed instrument of musick.

Sallads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian sparks guitar. Prior.

GU'LCHIN, gŭl'tshĭn. } Latin.] A little glutton. Skinner.

GULES, gŭlz. adj. [perhaps from goule, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shaksp.

He whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he lay couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules. Shakspeare.

GULF, gŭlf. n. s. [golfo, Italian.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island of Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatick. Knolles.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.

Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulph of deep Avernus' hole. Spenser.

I know thou 'dst rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulph,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs. Bentley.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shakspeare.

4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.

Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shakspeare.

GU'LFY, gŭl'fė. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; vorticosus.

Rivers arise: whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Oose, or gulfy Dun. Milton.
At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And scap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope.
High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle
Fronts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile. Pope.

To GULL, gŭl. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakspeare
Yet love these sorc'ries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.
He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politick. Hudibras.
They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estrange.
The Roman people were grossly gulled twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryd.
By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-ridden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He sooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL, gŭl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. [mergus.] A sea bird.
2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shakspeare's Much Ado.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Gov. of Tongue.

3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us so,
As that ungentle gull, the cuckow bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention plaid on. Shakspeare.
That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.

GU'LLCATCHER, gŭl'kătsh-ŭr. n. s. [gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher. Shakspeare.

GU'LLERY, gŭl'lŭr-ė. n. s. [from gull.] Cheat; imposture. Ainsworth.

GU'LLET, gŭl'lit.[99] n. s. [goulet, Fr. gula, Lat.]

1. The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe; the œsophagus.

It might be his doom
One day to sing
With gullet in string. Denham.
Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipes; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without whizzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. A small stream or lake. Not in use.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,
By which the artful gullet is embrac'd. Blackmore.
The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet. Arbuthnot.
The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Heylin.

To GU'LLY, gŭl'lė. v. n. [corrupted from gurgle.] To run with noise.

GU'LLYHOLE, gŭl'lė-hōle. n. s. [from gully and hole.] The holes where the gutters empty themselves in the subterraneous sewer.

GULO'SITY, gŭ-lŏs'ė-tė. n. s. [gulosus, Lat.] Greediness; gluttony; voracity.

To GULP, gŭlp. v. a. [golfen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morsel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Est.
I see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay.

GULP, gŭlp. n. s. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. More.
As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden's Fables.

GUM, gŭm. n. s. [gummi, Latin.]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstruums; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent. Quincy.

One whose eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare's Othello.
He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.
Her maiden tram,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden's Fables.

2. [ȝoma, Saxon; gumme, Dutch.] The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth.

The babe that milks me,
I 'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Sh' untwists a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.

To GUM, gŭm. v. a. [from the noun.] To close with gum; to smear with gum.

The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour. Wiseman's Surgery.

GUMMO'SITY, gŭm-mŏs'sė-tė. n. s. [from gummous.] The nature of gum; gumminess.

Sugar and honey make windy liquors, and the elastick fermenting particles are detained by their innate gummosity. Floyer.

GU'MMOUS, gŭm'mŭs.[314] adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummous or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil. Woodward's Natural History.

GU'MMY, gŭm'mė. adj. [from gum.]

1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a cord. Raleigh.
Nor all the gummy stores Arabia yields. Dryden's Virgil.
How each arising alder now appears,
And o'er the Po distils her gummy tears. Dryden.

2. Productive of gum.

The clouds
Tine the slant light'ning; whose thwart flame driv'n down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.

GUN, gŭn. n. s. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canne, ganne, gunne? Canne is the original of cannon.] The general name for fire-arms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dead curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon thyself. Shakspeare's Henry VI.
The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Knolles' History.
The bullet flying makes the gun recoil. Cleaveland.
In vain the dart or glitt'ring sword we shun,
Condemn'd to perish by the slaught'ring gun. Granville.

GUST, gŭst. n. s. [goust, French; gustus, Latin.]

1. Sense of tasting.

Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton's Par. Lost.
Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and sought with surly pride. Dryden's Fables.
My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden.

3. Love; liking.

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;
But, in defence, by mercy 'tis made just. Shaksp.
Old age shall do the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Estrange.
We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true happiness. Tillotson.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.

5. [from guster, Islandick.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

She led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shaksp.
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakspeare.
Presently come forth swarms and vollies of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained. Bacon's Henry VII.
As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps descend,
From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend
An aged sturdy oak. Denham.
Part stay for passage, 'till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a shining sheet. Dryden.
Pardon a weak distemper'd soul that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,
The sport of passion. Addison's Cato.

6. It is written in Spenser vitiously for justs, sports.

For jolly knight he seem'd, and fair did sit,
At one far knightly gusts, and fierce encounters fit. Spenser.

GU'STABLE, gŭs'tâ-bl.[405] adj. [gusto, Lat.]

Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.
Or whirl'd tempestuous by the gusty wind. Thomson.

GUT, gŭt. n. s. [kutteln, German.]

1. The long pipe reaching, with many convolutions, from the stomach to the vent.

This lord wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head. Shaksp. Troil. and Cress
A viol should have a lay of wire-strings below, close to the belly, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge, that by this means the upper strings stricken should make the lower resound. Bacon's Natural History.
The intestines or guts may be inflamed by any acrid or poisonous substance taken inwardly. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The stomach; the receptacle of food: proverbially.

And cramm'd them 'till their guts did ake,
With cawdle, custard, and plum-cake. Hudibras
With false weights their servants' guts they cheat,
And pinch their own to cover the deceit. Dryden.

3. Gluttony; love of gormandizing.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy guts bestow
Full ninety millions: yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank'st. Hakewill

To GUT, gŭt. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To eviscerate; to draw; to exenterate.

The fishermen save the most part of their fish: some are gutted, spitted, powdered, and dried. Carew's Cornwal.

2. To plunder of contents.

In Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime,
A troop of cut-throat guards were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces. Dryden.
Tom Brown of facetious memory, having gutted a proper name of its vowels, used it as freely as he pleased. Addison.

GU'TTATED, gŭt'tâ-tĕd. adj. [from gutta, Latin; a drop.] Besprinkled with drops; bedropped. Dict.

2. A small longitudinal hollow.

To GU'TTER, gût'tûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting safe go by
The divine Desdemona. Shaksp.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears. Sandys.

First in a place, by nature close, they build
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd and til'd. Dryd.

To GU'TTLE, gût'tl.[405] v. n. [from gut.] To feed luxuriously; to gormandize. A low word.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and, lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence. Dryden.

To GU'TTLE, gût'tl. v. a. [from gut.] To swallow. A low word.

The fool spit in his porridge, to try if they'd hiss: they did not hiss, and so he guttled them up, and scalded his chops. L'Estrange.

GU'TTLER, gût'tl-ûr.[98] n. s. [from guttle.] A greedy eater.

GU'TTULOUS, gût'tshû-lûs.[463] adj. [from guttula, Latin.] In the form of a small drop.

GYRA'TION, jî-râ'shûn. n. s. [gyro, Lat.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvium attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electrick. Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle, with gyrations continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newton.

GYRE, jire. n. s. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in any orbit.

Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward,
Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre,
Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard,
But rudely rag'd. Spenser.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the south by thy direction fly?
Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace? Sandys.

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
In restless gyres about the arctic pole. Sandys.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,
Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires. Dryd.

GY'RED, jî'rêd. adj. Failing in rings.

Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd,
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose
Ungarter'd, and down gyred to his ankle. Shaksp.

GYVES, jîvz. n. s. [gevyn, Welsh.] Fetters; chains for the legs.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shaksp.

And knowing this, should I yet stay,
Like such as blow away their lives,
And never will redeem a day,
Enamour'd of their golden gyves? Ben Jonson.

The poor prisoners, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Knolles.

Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet
A rising root that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryd.

To GYVE, jîve. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Shaksp.

H.

H, âtsh. Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, sounded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as, right, bought.

HA, hâ. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see. Shaksp.

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!
It is my Hastings! Rowe.

2. An expression of laughter. Used with reduplication.

He saith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Job.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;
Our plots and delusions
Have wrought such confusions,
That the monarch's a slave to the crown. Dryden.

HAAK, hâke. n. s. A fish. Ainsworth.

HA'BEAS CORPUS, hâ'bê-âs-kôr'pûs. [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. Cowell.

HABERDA'SHER, hâb'ûr-dâsh-ûr. n. s. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minshew from habt ihr dass, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon.

A haberdasher who was the oracle of the coffee house, declared his opinion. Addison.

HA'BERDINE, hâb-ûr-dêên'. n. s. A dried salt cod. Ainsworth.

HA'BERGEON, hâ-bûr'jê-ôn. n. s. [haubergeon, French; halbergium, low Latin.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breastplate; neckpiece; gorget.

And halbert some, and some a habergeon:
So every one in arms was quickly dight. Fairfax.
The shot let fly, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Magnano's brass habergeon. Hudibras.

HABI'LIMENT, hâ-bîl'ê-mênt. n. s. [habiliment, French.] Dress; clothes; garment.

He the fairest Una found,
Strange lady in so strange habiliment,
Teaching the satyres. Fairy Queen.
My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfurnish me,
You take the sum and substance that I have. Shaks.
The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habiliments of Irish drapery. Swift.

To HABI'LITATE, hâ-bîl'ê-tâte. v. n. [habiliter, Fr.] To qualify; to entitle. Not in use.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attainted, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament, being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon.

HABILITA'TION, hâ-bîl-ê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from habilitate.] Qualification.

The things are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation, without intention and act? Bacon.

HABI'LITY, hâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [habilité, French.] Faculty; power: now ability.

HA'BIT, hâb'ît. n. s. [habitus, Lat.]

1. State of any thing: as, habit of body.
2. Dress; accoutrement; garment.

I shifted
Into a madman's rags, t' assume a semblance
The very dogs disdain'd, and in this habit
Met I my father. Shaksp.
If you have any justice, any pity;
If ye be any thing but churchmen's habits. Shaksp.
Both the poets being dressed in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgment may be made betwixt them. Dryden.
The scenes are old, the habits are the same
We wore last year. Dryden.
Changes there are in veins of wit, like those of habits, or other modes. Temple.
There are among the statues several of Venus, in different habits. Addison.
The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count palatine. Shakspeare.

4. Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, 'till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction. South.
No civil broils have since his death arose,
But faction now by habit does obey;
And wars have that respect for his repose,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryden.
The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits, as shall ever after remain. Atterbury.

To HA'BIT, hâb'ît. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princess
Before Leontes:
She shall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Shakspeare.
Having called to his memory sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at the time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.
They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustick dances. Dryden.

HA'BITABLE, hâb'ê-tâ-bl. adj. [habitable, French; habitabilis, Lat.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.
That was her torrid and inflaming time;
This is her habitable tropique clime. Donne.
The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.
Look round the habitable world, how few
Know their own good, or knowing it pursue. Dryd.

HA'BITABLENESS, hâb'ê-tâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the torrid zone. More.
Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HA'BITANCE, hâb'ê-tânse. n. s. [habitatio, Lat.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
That here in desart hast thine habitance?
And these rich heaps of wealth do'st hide apart
From the world's eye, and from her right usance. Spenser.

HA'BITANT, hâb'ê-tânt. n. s. [habitant, French; habitans, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries
Officious; but to the earth's habitant. Milton.
Powers celestial to each other's view
Stand still confest, though distant far they lie,
Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope.

HABITA'TION, hâb-ê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [habitation, French; habitatio, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.

Amplitude almost immense, with stars
Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
Of destin'd habitation. Milton.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.

Palaces,
For want of habitation and repair,
Dissolve to heaps of ruins. Denham.
Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continued deterration brought to a lower pitch. Woodward.

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hooker
God oft descends to visit men
Unseen, and through their habitations walks
To mark their doings. Milton

HABITA'TOR, hâb'ê-tâ-tûr. n. s. [Lat.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's presence is more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators. Brown.

HABI'TUAL, hâb-bîtsh'û-âl.[481] adj. [habituel, French; from habit.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sin, there in pow'r before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton.
Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims. South.
By length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden
'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden.

HABI'TUALLY, hâ-bîtsh'û-âl-ê. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury.

To HABI'TUATE, hâ-bîtsh'û-âte. v. a. [habituer, Fr.] To accustom; to use one's self by frequent repetition: with to.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituate themselves to their vicious practices. Tillotson.
Such as live in a rarer air, are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbuthnot.

HA'BITUDE, hâb'ê-tûde. n. s. [habitudo, Latin; habitude, French.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Brown.
The will of God is like a straight unalterable rule, but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasion several habitudes of this rule unto it. Hale.
It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another. South.
As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred, so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Norris.
In all the habitudes of life,
The friend, the mistress, and the wife,
Variety we still pursue. Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
Was such dead authors could not give;
But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.
To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use. This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude. Dryden.
Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds,
And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry,
The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
Brought by long habitude from bad to worse;
Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

HA'BNAB, hâb'nâb. adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would nould, or ne would; will nill, or ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

He circles draws, and squares,
With cyphers, astral characters,
Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
Although set down habnab at random. Hudibras.

To HACK, hâk. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; hacher, French; from acaɹe, an axe, Saxon.]

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unskilful blows. It bears commonly some notion of contempt or malignity.

He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though hacked in some places, bewraying some fight not long since passed. Sidney.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight! Shaksp.

Richard the second here was hack'd to death. Shaksp.

I'll fight 'till from my bones my flesh be hackt. Shaksp.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root
Is hackt down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe. Shaksp.
Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces. Dryden.
Nor the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field,
But purple vests, and flow'ry garlands please. Addison.

But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack, and mawl. Pope.

2. To speak unreadily, or with hesitation.

Disarm them, and let them question: let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English. Shaksp.

To HACK, hâk. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute. Hanmer.

HA'CKLE, hâk'kl.[405] n. s. Raw silk; any flimsy substance unspun.

Take the hackle of a cock, or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one side of the feather, and then take the hackle silk, gold or silver thread, and make these fast at the bent of the hook. Walton.

To HA'CKLE, hâk'kl. v. a. To dress flax.

HA'CKNEY, hâk'nė. n. s. [hachnai, Welsh; hackeneye, Teutonick; haquenée, Fr.]

1. A pacing horse.

2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.

Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and hackneys are to hire. Bacon.

Who mounted a broom, the nag
And hackney of a Lapland hag,
In quest of you came hither post. Hudibras.

3. A hireling; a prostitute.

Three kingdoms rung
With his accumulative and hackney tongue. Roscommon.

That is no more than every lover
Does from his hackney lady suffer. Hudibras.
Shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new pension'd sycophant pretend
To break my windows. Pope.

4. Any thing let out for hire.

A wit can study in the streets;
Not quite so well, however, as one ought,
A hackney coach may chance to spoil a thought. Pope.

5. Much used; common.

These notions young students in physick derive from their hackney authors. Harvey.

To HA'CKNEY, hâk'nė. v. a. [from the noun.] To practise in one thing; to accustom, as to the road.

He is long hackney'd in the ways of men. Shak.

HA'CQUETON, hâk'kwė-tôn. n. s. [haquet, old French, a little horse.] Some piece of armour.

You may see the very fashion of the Irish horseman in his long hose, riding shoes of costly cordwain, his hacqueton, and his habergeon. Spenser.

HAD, hâd. The preterit and part. pass. of have. I had better, you had better, &c. means the same as, it would be better for me or you; or, it would be more eligible: it is always used potentially, not indicatively: nor is have ever used to that import. We say likewise, it had been better or worse.

I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition. Shaksp.
Had we not better leave this Utica,
To arm Numidia in our cause? Addison.

HA'DDOCK, hâd'dûk.[166] n. s. [hadot, Fr.] A sea fish of the cod kind, but small.

The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and haddock. Carew.

HAFT, hâft.[78] [79] n. s. [hæɹt, Saxon; hefi, Dutch; from To have or hold.] A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

This brandish'd dagger
I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast. Dryden.

These extremities of the joints are the hafts and handles of the members. Dryden.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts.

To HAFT, hâft. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft. Ainsworth.

HAG, hâg. n. s. [hæʒɹɹe, a goblin, Sax. heckle, a witch, Dutch.]

1. A fury; a she-monster.

Thus spoke th' impatient prince, and made a pause:
His foul hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;
And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes and tost their flaming brands. Crashaw.

2. A witch; an enchantress.

Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you poulcat, you runnion. Shaksp.

3. An old ugly woman.

Such affectations may become the young;
But thou old hag of threescore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee? Dryden.

To HAG, hâg. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terrour.

That makes them in the dark see visions,
And hag themselves with apparitions. Hudibras.
How are superstitious men hagged out of their wits, with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Estrange.

HA'GARD, hâg'gârd. adj. [hagard, Fr.]

1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.

As hagard hawk, presuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weary pounces all in vain doth spend,
To truss the prey too heavy for his flight. Fairy Queen.

She's too disdainful;
I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As hagard as the rock. Shaksp.

2. [hager, German.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly. To this sense I have put the following passage, for the author ought to have written hagard.

A hagged carrion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog, with good flesh upon 's back, fell into company together. L'Estrange.

3. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.

Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,
His hands and hagard eyes to heaven he cast. Dryden.

Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-cast hagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd! Smith.

HA'GGARD, hâg'gârd. n. s.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.

I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard. Shakspeare.

2. A species of hawk.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the south by thy direction fly? Sandys.

I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aires, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the haggard. Walton.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,
In a dark grot, the baleful haggard lay,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.

HA'GGARDLY, hâg'gârd-lė. adv. [from haggard.] Deformedly; uglily.

For her the rich Arabia sweats her gum;
And precious oils from distant Indies come,
How haggardly soe'er she looks at home. Dryden.

HA'GGESS, hâg'gis. n. s. [from hog or hack.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and enclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

HA'GGISH, hâg'gish. adj. [from hag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.

But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. Shakspeare.

To HA'GGLE, hâg'gl.[405] v. a. [corrupted from hackle or hack.] To cut; to chop; to mangle; always in a bad sense.

Suffolk first died, and York all haggled o'er,
Comes to him where in gore he lay insteep'd. Shakspeare.

To HA'GGLE, hâg'gl. v. n. To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.

HA'GGLER, hâg'gl-ûr.[98] n. s. [from haggle.]

1. One that cuts.

2. One that is tardy in bargaining.

HA'GIOGRAPHER, hâg'ė-ò-grâf'ûr. n. s. [ἁγιος and γραφω.] A holy writer.

The Jews divide the holy scriptures of the old testament into the law, prophets, and the hagiographers.

HAH, hâ. interject. An expression of sudden effort.

Her coats tuck'd up, and all her motions just,
She stamps, and then cries hah! at ev'ry thrust. Dryden.

HAIL, hâle. n. s. [hagel, Saxon.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling. Locke.

Thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend th' Egyptian sky.
Milton.

To HAIL, hàle. v. n. To pour down hail.

My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation when it shall hail, coming down on the forest. Isa.

HAIL, hàle. interject. [hœl, health, Saxon: hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or ὑγίαινε of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.

Hail, hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil. Shaks.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds;
It does not look as it would have a hail,
Or health wish'd in it, as on other morns.
Ben Jonson.

The angel hail
Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve. Milton.

Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! hail horrors! hail
Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell
Receive thy new possessor! Milton.

All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love;
Once first of men below, now first of birds above.
Dryden.

Hail to the sun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take. Rowe.

To HAIL, hàle. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.

A galley drawing near unto the shore, was hailed by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen.
Knolles.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

HA'ILSHOT, hàle'shôt. n. s. [hail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.

The master of the artillery did visit them sharply with murdering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill. Hayward.

HA'ILSTONE, hàle'stône. n. s. [hail and stone.] A particle or single ball of hail.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Shakspeare.

Hard hailstones lie not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such show'rs of acorns rain. Dryd.

HA'ILY, hà'lè. adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail.

From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold north congeals to haily showers.
Pope.

HAIR, hàre. n. s. [hæp, Saxon.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow.
Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shaksp.

Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a drill? Locke.

2. A single hair.

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakspeare.

Much is breeding;
Which like the courser's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Shakspeare.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written.
Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession. Shakspeare.

HA'IRBEL, hàre'bêl. n. s. A flower; the hyacinth.

HA'IRBRAINED, hàre'brân'd.[359] adj. [This should rather be written harebrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.

Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager.
Shakspeare.

HA'IRBREADTH, hàre'brêd*th*. n. s. [hair and breadth.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.

Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss. Judges.

I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field;
Of hairbreadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach. Shakspeare.

HA'IRCLOTH, hàre'klô*th*. n. s. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.

It is composed of reeds and parts of plants woven together, like a piece of haircloth. Grew.

HAIRLA'CE, hàre'lâse. n. s. [hair and lace.] The fillet with which women tie up their hair.

Some worms are commonly resembled to a woman's hairlace or fillet, thence called tenia. Harv.

If Molly happens to be careless,
And but neglects to warm her hairlace,
She gets a cold as sure as death. Swift.

HA'IRLESS, hàre'lês. adj. [from hair.] Wanting hair.

Whitebeards have arm'd their chin and hairless scalps
Against thy majesty. Shakspeare.

HA'IRINESS, hà'rè-nês. n. s. [from hairy.] The state of being covered with hair, or abounding with hair.

HA'IRY, hà'rè. adj. [from hair.]

1. Overgrown with hair; covered with hair.

She his hairy temples then had rounded
With coronet of flowers. Shakspeare.

Children are not hairy, for that their skins are more perspirable. Bacon.

2. Consisting of hair.

Storms have shed
From vines the hairy honours of their head. Dryd.

HAKE, hàke. n. s. A kind of fish.

The coast is stored with mackrel and hake. Carew.

HA'KOT, hâk'ût.[166] n. s. [from hake.] A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HAL, hâl, in local names, is derived like al from the Saxon healle, i. e. a hall, a palace. In Gothick alh signifies a temple, or any other famous building.
Gibson's Camden.

HA'LBERD, hâll'bûrd.[88] n. s. [halebarde, French; hallebarde, Dutch, from harde, an axe, and halle, a court, halberds being the common weapons of guards.] A battleaxe fixed to a long pole.

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast.
Shakspeare.

Our halberds did shut up his passage. Shaksp.

Four knaves in garbs succinct, a trusty band,
Caps on their heads, and halberds in their hand,
Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain. Pope.

HA'LBERDIER, hâll-bûr-dêêr'. n. s. [halberdier, French, from halberd.] One who is armed with a halberd.

The duchess appointed him a guard of thirty halberdiers, in a livery of murrey and blue, to attend his person. Bacon.

HA'LCYON, hâl'shê-ûn.[166] n. s. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.

Such smiling rogues, as these, sooth ev'ry passion,
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shaksp.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,
As halcyons brooding on a winter sea. Dryden.

HA'LCYON, hâl'shê-ûn.[367] adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.

When great Augustus made war's tempest cease;
His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace.
Denham.

No man can expect eternal serenity and halcyon days from so incompetent and partial a cause as the constant course of the sun in the equinoctial circle.
Bentley.

HALE, hâle. adj. [This should rather be written hail, from hæl, health.] Healthy; sound; hearty; well-complexioned.

My seely sheep like well below,
For they been hale enough I trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser.

Some of these wise partizans concluded the government had hired two or three hundred hale men, to be pinioned, if not executed, as the pretended captives. Addison.

His stomach too begins to fail;
Last year we thought him strong and hale,
But now he 's quite another thing:
I wish he may hold out 'till spring. Swift.

To HALE, hâle or hâwl. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently and rudely.

Fly to your house;
The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down. Shakspeare.

My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast
Hal'd out to murder. Shakspeare.

Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he hale thee to the judge. Luke.

He by the neck hath hal'd, in pieces cut,
And set me as a mark on every butt. Sandys.

Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought. Milton.

This sinistrous gravity is drawn that way by the great artery, which then subsideth, and haleth the heart unto it. Brown.

Who would not be disgusted with any recreation, in itself indifferent, if he should with blows be haled to it when he had no mind? Locke.

In all the tumults at Rome, though the people proceeded sometimes to pull and hale one another about, yet no blood was drawn, 'till the time of the Gracchi. Swift.

HA'LER, hâ'lûr or hâwl'ûr.[98] n. s. [from hale.] He who pulls and hales.

HALF, hâf.[78 401] n. s. plur. halves. [healf, Saxon, and all the Teutonick dialects. The l is often not sounded.]

1. A moiety; one part of two; an equal part.

An half acre of land. 1 Samuel.

Many might go to heaven with half the labour they go to hell, if they would venture their industry the right way. Ben Jonson.

Well chosen friendship, the most noble
Of virtues all our joys makes double,
And into halves divides our trouble. Denham.

Or what but riches is there known
Which man can solely call his own;
In which no creature goes his half,
Unless it be to squint and laugh? Hudibras.

No mortal tongue can half the beauty tell:
For none but hands divine could work so well.
Dryden.

If our manufacture foreign markets took off one half, and the other half were consumed amongst ourselves. Locke.

The council is made up half out of the noble families, and half out of the plebeian. Addison.

Half the misery of life might be extinguished, would men alleviate the general curse by mutual compassion. Addison.

Her beauty in thy softer half
Bury'd and lost, she ought to grieve. Prior.

Natural was it for a prince, who had proposed to himself the empire of the world, not to neglect the sea, the half of his dominions. Arbuthnot.

2. It sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

Had the land selected of the best,
Half had come hence, and let the world provide the rest. Dryden.

HALF, hâf. adv.

1. In part; equally.

I go with love and fortune, two blind guides,
To lead my way; half loth, and half consenting.
Dryden.

We have many half-scholars now-a-days, and there is much confusion and inconsistency in the notions and opinions of some persons. Watts.

HALF-SEAS over, hâf'sêz-ô'vûr. A proverbial expression for any one far advanced. It is commonly used of one half drunk.

I am half-seas o'er to death;
And since I must die once, I would be loth
To make a double work of what 's half finished.
Dryden.

HALF-SIGHTED, hâf'site-êd. adj. [half and sight.] Seeing imperfectly; having weak discernment.

The officers of the king's houshold had need be provident, both for his honour and thrift: they must look both ways, else they are but half-sighted. Bac.

HALF-SPHERE, hâf'sfêre. n. s. [half and sphere.] Hemisphere.

Let night grow blacker with thy plots: and day,
At shewing but thy head forth, start away
From this half-sphere. Ben Jonson.

HALF-STRAINED, hâf'strân'd. adj. [half and strain.] Half-bred; imperfect.

I find I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mungrel-mischievous; for my blood boil'd
To view this brutal act. Dryden.

HALF-SWORD, hâf'sôrd. n. s. Close fight; within half the length of a sword.

I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. Shaksp.

HALF-WAY, hâf'wâ. adv. [half and way.] In the middle.

Fearless he sees, who is with virtue crown'd,
The tempest rage, and hears the thunder sound;
Ever the same, let fortune smile or frown:
Serenely as he liv'd resigns his breath,
Meets destiny half-way, nor shrinks at death. Granville.

HALF-WIT, hâf'wit. n. s. [half and wit.] A blockhead; a foolish fellow.

Half wits are fleas, so little and so light,
We scarce could know they live, but that they bite.
Dryden.

HALF-WITTED, hâf'wit-têd. adv. [from half-wit.] Imperfectly furnished with understanding.

I would rather have trusted the refinement of our language, as to sound, to the judgment of the women than to half-witted poets. Swift.

Jack had passed for a poor, well-meaning, half-witted, crack-brained fellow: people were strangely surprised to find him in such a roguery. Arbuthnot.

When half is added to any word noting personal qualities, it commonly notes contempt.

HA'LIBUT, hôl'lè-bût. n. s. A sort of fish. Ainsworth.

With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls
And courts of princes. Milton.

HALLELU'JAH, hâl-lè-lôô'yâ. n. s. [הללויה] Praise ye the Lord. A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy saints
Unfained hallelujahs to Thee sing,
Hymns of high praise. Milton.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthems, in which the church militant seems ambitious to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hallelujahs of the celestial choirs. Boyle.

HA'LLOO, hâl-lôô'. interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from a lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from haller, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,
More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,
And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out.
Dryden.

To HA'LLOO, hål-lôô'. v. n. [haler, Fr.]

1. To cry as after the dogs.

A cry more tuneable
Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn. Sha.

2. To treat as in contempt.

Country folks hallooed and hooted after me, as the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to the enemy. Sidney.

To HA'LLOO, hål-lôô'. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,
Though gout and age his speed detain,
Old John halloos his hounds again. Prior.

2. To chase with shouts.

If I fly, Marcius,
Halloo me like a hare. Shaksp.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him
Halloo the other. Shaksp.

To HA'LLOW, hål lô.[85] v. a. [halgian, halig, Sax. holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify our hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick resort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so halloweth the same with prayer that he hopeth it shall not burn. Hooker.

Is 't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead.
Shaksp.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities: yet pray'rs and wishes
Are all I can return. Shaksp.

God from work
Now resting, bless'd and hallow'd the seventh day,
As resting on that day from all his works,
But not in silence holy kept. Milton.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn. Dryden.

No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound.
Granville.

2. To reverence as holy: hallowed be thy name.

HALLUCINA'TION, hål-lû-sê-nâ'shûn. n. s. hallucinatio, Latin.] Errour; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but questionless a mere hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey.

This must have been the hallucination of the transcriber, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T. Addison.

HALM, hâwm. n. s. [healm, Saxon.] Straw; pronounced hawn: which see.

HA'LO, hâ'lô. n. s. A red circle round the sun or moon.

If the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be coloured. Newton.

I saw by reflection, in a vessel of stagnating water, three halos, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows concentrick to his body. Newton.

HA'LSENING, hâlz'ning. adj. [hals, German; hase, Scotish, the neck.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue. Not in use.

This ill halsening horny name hath, as Cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many. Carew.

HA'LSER, hâw'sûr. n. s. [from halȝ, neck, and ꝛeel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to hawser.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow base
They hoisted, and with well-wreath'd halser hoise
Their white sails. Chapman.

No halsers need to bind these vessels here,
Nor bearded anchors; for no storms they fear. Dryd.

To HALT, hâlt. v. n. [healc, Saxon, lame; healtan, to limp.]

1. To limp; to be lame.

And will she yet debase her eyes,
On me, that halt, and am mis-shapen thus? Shaksp.

Thus inborn broils the factions would engage,
Or wars of exil'd heirs, or foreign rage,
'Till halting vengeance overtook our age. Dryden.

Spenser himself affects the obsolete,
And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet. Pope.

2. To stop in a march.

I was forced to halt in this perpendicular march. Addison.

3. To hesitate; to stand dubious.

How long halt ye between two opinions? 1 Kings.

4. To fail; to faulter.

Here 's a paper written in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice. Shaksp.

All my familiars watched for my halting, saying,
Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him. Jeremiah.

HALT, hâlt. adj. [from the verb.] Lame; crippled.

Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind. Luke.

HALT, hâlt. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.

2. [alte, Fr.] A stop in a march.

The heav'nly bands
Down from a sky of jasper lighted now
In Paradise, and on a hill made halt. Milton.

Scouts each coast light armed scour
Each quarter to descry the distant foe,
Where lodg'd, or whither fled, or if for fight
In motion, or in halt. Milton.

Without any halt they marched between the two armies. Clarendon.

He might have made a halt 'till his foot and artillery came up to him. Clarendon.

HA'LTER, hâl'tûr. n. s. [from halt.] He who limps.

HA'LTER, hâl'tûr. n. s. [healfterꝛe, Saxon, from halȝ, the neck.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.

He 's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shak.

They were to die by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded; wherefore they made a choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Hayward.

Where I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note
Disgorgeth halters, as a juggler's throat
Doth ribbands. Cleaveland.

He gets renown, who to the halter near,
But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear. Dryden.

2. A cord; a strong string.

Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge. Sandys.

To HA'LTER, hâl'tûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a cord; to catch in a noose.

He might have employed his time in the frivolous delights of catching moles and haltering frogs. Atterbury.

To HALVE, hâv.[78] v. a. [from half, halves.] To divide into two parts.

HALVES, hâvz. interj. [from half, halves being the plural.] An expression by which any one lays claim to an equal share.

Have you not seen how the divided dam
Runs to the summons of the hungry lamb?
But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first.
Cleaveland.

HAM, hâm. whether initial or final, is no other than the Saxon ham, a house, farm, or village. Gibson's Camden.

HAM, hâm. n. s. [ham, Saxon; hamme, Dutch.]

1. The hip; the hinder part of the articulation of the thigh with the knee.

The ham was much relaxed; but there was some contraction remaining. Wiseman.

2. The thigh of a hog salted.

Who has not learn'd, fresh sturgeon and ham pye
Are no rewards for want and infamy? Pope.

HA'MATED, hâm'â-têd. adj. [hamatus, Lat.] Hooked; set with hooks.

To HA'MBLE, hâm'bl. v. a. [from ham.] To cut the sinews of the thigh; to hamstring.

HAME, hâme. n. s. [hama, Saxon.] The collar by which a horse draws in a wagon.

HA'MLET, hâm'lêt.[99] n. s. [ham, Sax. and let, the diminutive termination.] A small village.

Within the self-same lordship, parish, or hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value. Bacon.

He pitch'd upon the plain
His mighty camp, and when the day return'd,
The country wasted and the hamlets burn'd. Dryd.

HA'MMER, hâm'mûr.[98] n. s. [hamer, Sax. hammer, Dan.]

1. The instrument consisting of a long handle and heavy head, with which any thing is forged or driven.

The armourers,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation, Shaksp.

The stuff will not work well with a hammer. Bacon.

It is broken not without many blows, and will break the best anvils and hammers of iron. Brown.

Every morning he rises fresh to his hammer and his anvil. South.

The smith prepares the hammer for the stroke. Dryden.

2. Any thing destructive.

'Till he had hammer'd out a vast estate. Dryden.

I must pay with hammered money instead of milled. Dryden.

3. To work in the mind; to contrive by intellectual labour: used commonly in contempt.

Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To humble down thy husband and thyself? Shaksp.

He was nobody that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witchcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden.

Some spirits by whom they were stirred and guided in the name of the people, hammer'd up the articles. Hayward.

To HA'MMER, hâm'mûr. v. n.

1. To work; to be busy; in contempt.

Nor need'st thou much importune me to that,
Whereon this month I have been hammering. Shak.

I have been studying how to compare
This prison where I live unto the world;
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer on 't. Shaksp.

2. To be in agitation.

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand;
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head. Shaksp.

HA'MMERER, hâm'mûr-rûr. n. s. [from hammer.] He who works with a hammer.

HA'MMERHARD, hâm'mûr-hârd. n. s. [hammer and hard.]

Prince Maurice of Nassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life. Temple.

HA'MPER, hâmp'ûr.[98] n. s. [supposed by Minshew to be contracted from hand panier; but hanaperium appears to have been a word long in use, whence hanaper, hamper.] A large basket for carriage.

What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts!
What hampers full of bleeding hearts! Swift.

To HA'MPER, hâmp'ûr. v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain. Junius observes that hamplyns in Teutonick is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper, or hanaper, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine.]

1. To shackle; to entangle, as in chains or nets.

O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangl'd, hamper'd thing. Herbert.

We shall find such engines to assail,
And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force. Milton.

What was it but a lion hampered in a net! L'Estrange.

Wear under vizard-masks their talents,
And mother wits before their gallants;
Until they 're hamper'd in the noose
Too fast to dream of breaking loose. Hudibras.

They hamper and entangle our souls, and hinder their flight upwards. Tillotson.

2. To ensnare; to inveigle; to catch with allurements.

She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby. Shaksp.

3. To complicate; to tangle.

See how yond justice rails upon yond simple thief! Hark in thine ear: change places; and, handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief?
Shaksp.

Neither cross and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handydandy. Arbuthnot.

To HANG, hâng.[409] v. a. pret. and part. pass. hanged or hung, anciently hong. [hanzan, Saxon.]

1. To suspend; to fasten in such a manner as to be sustained, not below but above.

Strangely visited people he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shaksp.

His great army is utterly ruined, he himself slain in it, and his head and right hand cut off, and hung up before Jerusalem. South.

2. To place without any solid support.

Thou all things hast of nothing made,
That hung'st the solid earth in fleeting air,
Vein'd with clear springs, which ambient seas repair. Sandys.

3. To choke and kill by suspending by the neck, so as that the ligature intercepts the breath and circulation.

He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison. Shaksp.

Hanging supposes human soul and reason;
This animal's below committing treason:
Shall he be hang'd, who never could rebel?
That's a preferment for Achitophel. Dryden

4. To display; to show aloft.

This unlucky mole misled several coxcombs; and, like the hanging out of false colours, made some of them converse with Rosalinda in what they thought the spirit of her party. Addison.

5. To let fall below the proper situation; to decline.

There is a wicked man that hangeth down his head sadly: but inwardly he is full of deceit. Ecclus.

The beauties of this place should mourn;
Th' immortal fruits and flow'rs at my return
Should hang their wither'd head; for sure my breath
Is now more pois'nous. Dryden.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
White lilies hang their heads, and soon decay;
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

The cheerful birds no longer sing;
Each drops his head, and hangs his wing. Prior.

6. To fix in such a manner as in some directions to be moveable.

The gates and the chambers they renewed, and hanged doors upon them. 1 Mac

7. To cover or charge by any thing suspended.

Hung be the heav'ns with black, yield day to night! Shaksp.

The pavement ever foul with human gore;
Heads and their mangled members hung the door.
Dryden.

8. To furnish with ornaments or draperies fastened to the wall.

Musick is better in chambers wainscotted than hanged. Bacon.

If e'er my pious father for my sake
Did grateful off'rings on thy altars make,
Or I increas'd them with my sylvan toils,
And hung thy holy roofs with savage spoils,
Give me to scatter these. Dryden.

Sir Roger has hung several parts of his house with the trophies of his labours. Addison.

To HANG, hâng. v. n.

1. To be suspended; to be supported above, not below.

Over it a fair portcullis hung,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compacture strong.
Spenser.

2. To depend; to fall looscly on the lower part; to dangle.

Upon her shoulders wings she wears,
Like hanging sleeves, lin'd through with ears.
Hudibras.

If gaming does an aged sire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice,
And shakes in hanging sleeves the little box and dice. Dryden.

3. To bend forward.

By hanging is only meant a posture of bending forward to strike the enemy. Addison.

4. To float; to play.

And fall these sayings from that gentle tongue,
Where civil speech and soft persuasion hung?
Prior.

5. To be supported by something raised above the ground.

Whatever is placed on the head may be said to hang; as we call hanging gardens such as are planted on the top of the house. Addison.

6. To rest upon by embracing.

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied. Shaksp.

To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave. Shaksp

Faustina is described in the form of a lady sitting upon a bed, and two little infants hanging about her neck. Peacham.

7. To hover; to impend.

He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace. Shaksp.

Odious names of distinction, which had slept while the dread of popery hung over us, were revived. Atterbury.

8. To be loosely joined.

Whither go you?
——To see your wife; is she at home?
—Ay, and as idle as she may hang together. Shak.

9. To drag; to be incommodiously joined.

In my Lucia's absence
Life hangs upon me, and becomes a burden.
Addison.

10. To be compact or united: with together.

In the common cause we are all of a piece: we hang together. Dryden.

Your device hangs very well together; but is it not liable to exceptions? Addison.

11. To adhere, unwelcomely or incommodiously.

A cheerful temper shines out in all her conversation, and dissipates those apprehensions which hang on the timorous or the modest, when admitted to her presence. Addison.

Shining landskips, gilded triumphs, and beautiful faces, disperse that gloominess which is apt to hang upon the mind in those dark disconsolate seasons. Addison.

12. To rest; to reside.

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid. Shaksp.

13. To be in suspence; to be in a state of uncertainty.

The life shall hang in doubt before thee, and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life. Deuteronomy.

14. To be delayed; to linger.

A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hung not, but so swift with tempest fell
On the proud crest of Satan. Milton.

She thrice essay'd to speak; her accents hung,
And fault'ring dy'd unfinish'd on her tongue. Dryd.

15. To be dependant on.

Oh, how wretched
Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favours!
Shakspeare.

Great queen! whose name strikes haughty monarchs pale,
On whose just sceptre hangs Europa's scale. Prior.

16. To be fixed or suspended with attention.

Though wond'ring senates hung on all he spoke,
The club must hail him master of the joke. Pope.

17. To have a steep declivity.

Sussex marl shews itself on the middle of the sides of hanging grounds. Mortimer.

HA'NGER, hâng'ûr.[93] n. s. [from hang.] A short broad sword.

HA'NGER-ON, hâng-ûr-ôn'. n. s. [from hang.] A dependant; one who eats and drinks without payment.

If the wife or children were absent, their rooms were supplied by the umbræ, or hangers-on. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They all excused themselves save two, which two he reckoned his friends, and all the rest hangers-on. L'Estrange.

He is a perpetual hanger-on, yet nobody knows how to be without him. Swift.

HA'NGING, hâng'îng.[410] n. s. [from hang.]

1. Drapery hung or fastened against the walls of rooms by way of ornament.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shaksp.

Being informed that his breakfast was ready, he drew towards the door, where the hangings were held up. Clarendon.

Now purple hangings cloath the palace walls,
And sumptuous feasts are made in splendid halls.
Dryden.

Lucas Van Leyden has infected all Europe with his designs for tapestry, which, by the ignorant, are called ancient hangings. Dryden.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Any thing that hangs to another. Not in use.

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather. Shakspeare.

HA'NGING, hâng'îng. participial adj. [from hang.]

1. Foreboding death by the halter.

Surely, sir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakspeare.

How foul a snout, and what a hanging face!
Dryden.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter; a hanging matter.

HA'NGMAN, hâng'mân.[88] n. s. [hang and man.

1. The publick executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

Who makes that noise there? who are you?
—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shaksp.

Men do not stand
In so ill case, that God hath with his hand
Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate,
Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison.

2. A term of reproach, either serious or ludicrous.

One cried, God bless us! and Amen! the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:
Listening their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakspeare.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakspeare.

HANK, hângk. n. s. [hank, Islandick, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

2. A tie; a check; an influence. A low word.

Do we think we have the hank that some gallants have on their trusting merchants, that, upon peril of losing all former scores, he must still go on to supply? Decay of Piety.

To HA'NKER, hângk'ûr. v. n. [hankeren, Dutch.] To long importunately; to have an incessant wish: it has commonly after before the thing desired. It is scarcely used but in familiar language

And now the saints began their reign,
For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,
And felt such bowel hankerings,
To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras

Among women and children, care is to be taken that they get not a hankering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers. L'Estrange.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant hankers after something else. L'Estrange.

Dost thou not hanker after a greater liberty in some things? If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution. Calamy.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always hankering after the diversions of the town. Addison.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hankerings after its ancient liberty. Addison.

HAN'T, hânt.[80] for has not, or have not.

That roguish leer of your's makes a pretty woman's heart ake: you han't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HAP, hâp. n. s. [anhap, in Welsh, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flow'ring forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the surest shield. Sid.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Hooker.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Nor feared she among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had she seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of haps and hazards been.
Fairfax.

HAP-HAZARD, hâp-hâz'ârd.[88] n. s. Chance; accident: perhaps originally hap hazardè.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge' sake. Hooker.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

To HAP, hâp. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To happen; to have the casual consequence.

It will be too late to gather ships or soldiers, which may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser.

2. To come by chance; to befall casually.

Run you to the citadel,

And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd. Shaksp.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon

HA'PLESS, hâp'lês. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap! Shaksp.

Here hapless Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryd.

Did his hapless passion equal mine,
I would refuse the bliss. Smith.

HA'PLY, hâp'lè. adv. [from hap.]

1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shakspeare.

To warn
Us, haply too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days. Milton.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouch'd,
Though that seems strange. Rowe.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift.

2. By chance; by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,
Him haply slumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-foundered skiff
Deeming some island oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton.

To HA'PPEN, hâp'p'n.[405] v. n. [from hap.]

1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.

Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall happen. Isaiah.

I come to wive it wealthily in Padua:
If wealthily, then happily in Padua. Shakspeare.

Preferr'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown,
Falling they rise to be with us made one. Waller.

Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.

2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.

Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity: as, he lives happily.

4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for haply.

One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.

HA'PPINESS, hâp'pè-nês. n. s. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker.

Oh! happiness of sweet retired content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.

Philosophers differ about the chief good or happiness of man. Temple.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.

Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope.

Form'd by some rule that guides but not constrains,
And finish'd more through happiness than pains. Pope.

HA'PPY, hâp'pè. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.

At other end Uran did Strephon lend
Her happy making hand. Sidney.

Am I happy in thy news?
—If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Beget your happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakspeare.

Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, t' whose happy making sight alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

Chymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,
And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Addressful; ready.

One gentleman is happy at reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HA'QUETON, hâk'kwè-tûn. n. s. A coat of mail. Spenser.

HARA'NGUE, hâ-râng'.[337] n. s. [harangue, French. The original of the French word is much questioned: Menage thinks it a corruption of hearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or orationaire, orationer, oraner, aranger, haranguer.] A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assemble, and harangues are heard, but soon
In factious opposition. Milton.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

Many preachers neglect method in their harangues. Watts.

To HARA'NGUE, hâ-râng'. v. n. [haranguer, French.] To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.

To HARA'NGUE, hâ-râng'. v. a. To address by an oration: as, he harangued the troops.

1. A lodging; a place of entertainment.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd;
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryden.

Doubly curs'd
Be all those easy fools who give it harbour. Rowe.

2. A port or haven for shipping.

Three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly. Shaksp.

They leave the mouths of Po,
That all the borders of the town o'erflow;
And spreading round in one continu'd lake,
A spacious hospitable harbour make. Addison.

3. An asylum; a shelter; a place of shelter and security.

To HA'RBOUR, hâr'bûr. v. n. [from the noun.] To receive entertainment; to sojourn; to take shelter.

This night let's harbour here in York. Shaksp.

They are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord would be. Shakspeare.

Southwards they bent their flight,
And harbour'd in a hollow rock at night:
Next morn they rose, and set up ev'ry sail;
The wind was fair, but blew a mackrel gale. Dryden.

Let me be grateful; but let far from me
Be fawning cringe, and false dissembling look,
And servile flattery, that harbours oft
In courts and gilded roofs. Philips.

To HA'RBOUR, hâr'bûr. v. a.

1. To entertain; to permit to reside.

My lady bids me tell you, that though she harbours you as her uncle, she's nothing allied to your disorders. Shakspeare.

Knaves I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants. Shaksp.

Let not your gentle breast harbour one thought
Of outrage from the king. Rowe.

We owe this old house the same kind of gratitude that we do to an old friend who harbours us in his declining condition, nay even in his last extremities. Pope.

How people, so greatly warmed with a sense of liberty, should be capable of harbouring such weak superstition; and that so much bravery and so much folly can inhabit the same breasts. Pope.

2. To shelter; to secure.

Harbour yourself this night in this castle: this country is very dangerous for murthering thieves to trust a sleeping life among them. Sidney.

HA'RBOURAGE, hâr'bûr-âje.[90] n. s. [herbergage, French, from harbour.] Shelter; entertainment.

Let in us, your king, whose labour'd spirits,
Forewearied in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shaksp.

HA'RBOURER, hâr'bûr-ûr.[98] n. s. [from harbour.] One that entertains another.

HA'RBOURLESS, hâr'bûr-lês. adj. [from harbour.] Wanting harbour; being without lodging; without shelter.

1. The just adaptation of one part to another.

The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; so that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony. Bacon.

The harmony of things,
As well as that of sounds, from discord springs. Denham.

Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all its works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity. Cheyne.

2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.

The sound
Symphonious, of ten thousand harps that tun'd
Angelick harmonies. Milton.

Harmony is a compound idea, made up of different sounds united. Watts.

3. Concord; correspondent sentiment.

In us both one soul,
Harmony to behold in wedded pair!
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.

I no sooner in my heart divin'd,
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet! Milton.

HA'RNESS, hår'nês. n. s. [harnois, Fr. supposed from iern or hiern, Runick; hiairn, Welsh and Erse, iron.]

1. Armour; defensive furniture of war. Somewhat antiquated.

A goodly knight, all dress'd in harness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet. Spenser.

Of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness. Shakspeare.

Were I a great man, I should fear to drink:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats. Shakspeare.

2. The traces of draught horses, particularly of carriages of pleasure or state; of other carriages we say geer.

Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl. Shakspeare.

Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

To HA'RNESS, hår'nês. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in armour.

He was harnest light, and to the field goes he. Shakspeare.

Full fifty years, harness'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast. Rowe.

2. To fix horses in their traces.

Before the door her iron chariot stood,
All ready harnessed for journey new. Spenser.

Harness the horses, and get up the horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets. Jeremiah.

When I plough my ground, my horse is harnessed and chained to my plough. Hale.

To the harnessed yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil. Thomson.

HARP, hårp. n. s. [heapp, Saxon; harpe, Fr. It is used through both the Teutonick and Roman dialects, and has been long in use.

Romanusq; lyra plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpa. Ven Fort.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire, and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempest cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet musick which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spenser.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;
This when sweet Orpheus struck, to list'ning rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creech.

To HARP, hårp. v. n. [harper, French, from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Revelation.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? 1 Cor.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born heir. Milton.

You harp a little too much upon one string. Collier.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shakspeare.

For thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'st harp'd my fear aright. Shakspeare.

He seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shakspeare.

HA'RPER, hår'pûr.[98] n. s. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor wooe in rhime, like a blind harper's song. Shakspeare.

I'm the god of the harp: stop my fairest:—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again. Tickell.

HA'RPING Iron, hår'pĭng-ī'ûrn. n. s. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe:
Who, when he felt his side so rudely goar'd
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Waller.

HARPONE'ER, hår-pō-nēēr'. n. s. [harponeur, French, from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.

HARPO'ON, hår-pōōn'. n. s. [harpon, Fr.] A harping iron.

HA'RPSICHORD, hårp'sė-kōrd. n. s. A musical instrument, strung with wires, and played by striking keys.

HA'RPY, hår'pė. n. s. [harpyia, Latin; harpie, harpye, French.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures, which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Raleigh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakspeare.

HA'RQUEBUSS, hâr'kwė-bûs. n. s. [See AR'QUEBUSE.] A hand-gun.

HA'RQUEBUSSIER, hâr-kwė-bûs-sėėr'.[275] n. s. [from harquebuss.] One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Knolles.

HARRIDA'N, hâr'rė-dân. n. s. [corrupted from haridelle, Fr. a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing 's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk:
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.
Swift.

HA'RROW, hâr'rō. n. s. [charroue, French; harcke, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth drawn over sowed ground to break the clods, and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows. Dryden.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer.

To HA'RROW, hâr'rō. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,
Not only thy peason, but also thy beans. Tusser.

2. To break with the harrow.

Canst thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee. Job.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy. Shaksp.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Shaksp.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scotish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions. [from hepgian, Saxon.] Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stowre,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre. Fairy Queen.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did'st make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, didst bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser.

6. To disturb; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written harry, harer, French.]

Most like; it harrows me with fear and wonder: Shaksp.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care. Milton.

HA'RROW, hâr'rō. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd! Spenser.

HA'RROWER, hâr'rō-ûr. n. s. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

To HA'RRY, hâr'rė. v. a. [harer, French.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.
—I repent me much
That I so harry'd him. Shaksp.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See To HARROW.

HARSH, hârsh. adj. [hervische, Germ. Skinner.]

1. Austere; roughly sour.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought t' appear.
Denham.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh, and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shaksp.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line. Dryd.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To servile duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can'st not praise.
Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him. Atterbury.

4. Rugged to the touch; rough.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle.

5. Unpleasing; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryden.

HA'RSHLY, hârsh'lė. adv. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly; austerely to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripely.

'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Unpleasantly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears. Shaksp.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shaksp.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryd.

HA'RSHNESS, hârsh'nės. n. s. [from harsh.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound. Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.

Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.

Thy tender hefted nature shall not give
Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shaksp.

HART, hârt. n. s. [heopt, Sax.] A he deer; the male of the roe.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shaksp.

The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May.

HA'RT-ROYAL, hârt'rōė-yâl. n. s. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.

HA'RTSHORN, hârts'hôrn. n. s. A drug.

Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms. What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorifick, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: It is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodward.

HA'RTSHORN, hârts'hôrn. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

HA'RTSTONGUE, hârts'tûng. n. s. [lingua cervina, Lat.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.

Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer.

HA'RTWORT, hârt'wûrt. n. s. [tordylium, Lat.] An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

HA'RVEST, hâr'vêst. n. s. [hæpfeſt, Saxon.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shaksp.

With harvest work he is worse than in spring. L'Estrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered, and inned.

From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shaksp.

When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryd.

3. The product of labour.

Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.

HA'RVEST-HOME, hâr'vêst-hôme. n. s.

1. A song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn it is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harvest.

At harvest-home, and on the shearing day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay. Dryden.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.

His wife I will use as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home. Shaksp.

HA'RVEST-LORD, hâr'vêst-lôrd. n. s. The head reaper at the harvest.

Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tusser.

HA'RVESTER, hâr'vês-tûr. n. s. [from harvest.] One who works at harvest.

HA'RVESTMAN, hâr'vêst-mân. n. s. [harvest and man.] A labourer in the harvest.

Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shaksp.

To HASH, hâsh. v. n. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces and mingle.

He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, though some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order and politeness, but hashed up in haste. Garth.

HASK, hâsk. n. s. This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

HA'SLET, hâ'slêt. } n. s. [hasla, Islan-
HA'RSLET, hâr'slêt. } dick, a bundle; hasterel, hastereau, hastier, Fr.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe, and part of the throat to it.

HASP, hâsp.[79] n. s. [hæpp, Sax. whence in some provinces it is yet called hapse.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer.

To HASP, hâsp. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.

HA'SSOCK, hâs'sûk.[168] n. s. [haseck, German.] Skinner.

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.

He found his parishioners very irregular: and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hask are the same.

HAST, hâst. The second person singular of have.

HASTE, hâste.[74] n. s. [haste, Fr. haeste, Dut.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!
But O, thou wilt not, can'st not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Crashaw.

Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writ;
In both we find like negligence and wit. Waller.

In as much haste, as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.

The wretched father running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, thy next invade. Dryd.

2. Passion; vehemence.

I said in my haste all men are liars. Psalms.

To HASTE, hâste.[472] } v. n. [haster, Fr.
To HA'STEN, hâ'sn.[405] } haesten, Dut.]

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.

I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee. Jeremiah.

2. To move with swiftness, eagerness, or hurry.

'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you so? Shak.

They were troubled and hasted away. Psalms.

All those things are passed away like a shadow, and as a post that hasted by. Wisdom.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.

These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,
Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryd.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope.

Soon as the sun awakes, the sprightly court
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.

To HASTE, hâste. } [472] v. a. To push
To HA'STEN, hâ'sn. } forward; to urge on; to precipitate; to drive a swifter pace.

Let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shaksp.

All hopes of succour from your arms are past;
To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.

Each sees his lamp with different lustre crown'd:
Each knows his course with diff'rent periods bound;
And in his passage through the liquid space,
Nor hastens nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.

HA'STENER, hâ'sn-ûr.[98] n. s. [from hasten.] One that hastens or hurries.

HA'STILY, hâs'tê-lê. adv. [from hasty.]

1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.

A voice that called loud and clear,
Come hither, hither, O come hastily! Spenser.

If your grace incline that we should live,
You must not, sir, too hastily forgive. Waller.

The next to danger hot pursu'd by fate,
Half cloth'd, half naked, hastily retire. Dryden.

2. Rashly; precipitately.

Without considering consequences, we hastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

3. Passionately; with vehemence.

HA'STINESS, hâs'tê-nês. n. s. [from hasty.]

1. Haste; speed.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastiness told Basilius. Sidney.

3. Rash eagerness.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastiness of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

There is most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hooker.

4. Angry testiness; passionate vehemence.

HA'STINGS, hâs'tingz. n. s. [from hasty.] Peas that come early.

The large white and green hastings are not to be set till the cold is over. Mortimer.

HA'STY, hâs'tê. adj. [hastif, French, from haste; haestig, Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

Is this the counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty footed time
For parting us! Shaksp.

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly. Proverbs.

3. Rash; precipitate.

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? There is more hope of a fool than of him. Proverbs.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Ecclus.

4. Early ripe.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the summer. Isaiah.

HA'STY-PUDDING, hâs-tê-pûd'ding. n. s. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

Sure hasty-pudding is thy chiefest dish,
With bullock's liver or some stinking fish. Dorset.

HAT, hât.[74] n. s. [hæt, Saxon; hatt, German.] A cover for the head.

She 's as big as he is; and there 's her thrum hat, and her muffler too. Shaksp.

Out of mere ambition you have made
Your holy hat be stampt on the king's coin. Shak.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand he bore the sleep-compelling rod. Dryden.

HA'TBAND, hât'bând.[88] n. s. [hat and band.] A string round the hat.

They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Bacon.

Room for the noble gladiator! see
His coat and hatband shew his quality. Dryden.

HA'TCASE, hât'kâse. n. s. [hat and case.] A slight box for a hat.

I might mention a hatcase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

To HATCH, hâtsh. v. a. [hecken, Germ. as Skinner thinks, from heghen, eghen, æg, egg, Sax.]

1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

He kindly spreads his spacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring. Denham.

The tepid caves, and fens and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs, that soon

Bursting with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.

When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to sit. Ray.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, 'till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.

Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have chosen those churches as fittest nests, where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hooker.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour Hayward.

5. [from hacher, French, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.

Who first shall wound through others arms, his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatcht. Chapman.

Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axletree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shaksp.

Those tender hairs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the sight. Dryd.

To HATCH, hâtsh. v. n.

1. To be in a state of growing quick.

He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were hatching, which varied. Boyle.

2. To be in a state of advance toward effect.

HATCH, hâtsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A brood excluded from the egg.
2. The act of exclusion from the egg.
3. Disclosure; discovery.

Something 's in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood:
And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclose
Will be some danger. Shaksp.

4. [hæca, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.] A half door; a door with opening over it: perhaps from hacher, to cut, as a hatch is part of a door cut in two.

Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch. Shaksp.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches. Shaksp.

There she 's hid;
The mariners all under hatches stow'd. Shaksp.

So seas impell'd by winds with added pow'r,
Assault the sides, and o'er the hatches tow'r. Dryd.

A ship was fasten'd to the shore;
The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,
For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,
And skipp'd and skulk'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.

He assures us how this fatherhood continued its course, 'till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Locke.

The hatchet is to hew the irregularities of stuff. Moxon.

His harmful hatchet he hent in his hand,
And to the field he speedeth. Spenser.

Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakspeare.

Nails, hammers, hatchets sharp, and halters strong. Crashaw.

Tyrrheus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden.

Our countryman presented him with a curious hatchet, and asking him whether it had a good edge, tried it upon the donor. Addison.

HA'TCHET-FACE, hâtsh'ît-fâse. n. s. An ugly face; such, I suppose, as might be hewn out of a block by a hatchet.

An ape his own dear image will embrace:
An ugly beau adores a hatchet-face. Dryden.

HA'TCHMENT, hâtsh'mênt. n. s. [corrupted from achievement. See ACHIEVEMENT.] Armorial escutcheon placed over a door at a funeral.

His means of death, his obscure funeral,
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rites nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard. Shakspeare.

HA'TCHWAY, hâtsh'wâ. n. s. [hatches and way.] The way over or through the hatches.

To HATE, hâte.[74] v. a. [hatian, Sax.] To detest; to abhor; to abominate; to regard with the passion contrary to love.

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.
—Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me. Shakspeare.

Do all men kill the thing they do not love?
—Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
—Every offence is not a hate at first. Shaksp.

Those old inhabitants of thy holy land thou hatest for doing most odious works. Wisdom.

But whatsoever our jarring fortunes prove,
Though our lords hate, methinks we two may love. Dryden.

HATE, hâte. n. s. [hæce, Saxon.] Malignity; detestation; the contrary to love.

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate. Shaksp.

HA'TEFUL, hâte'fûl. adj. [hate and full.]

1. That causes abhorrence; odious; abominable; detestable.

My name 's Macbeth.
—The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. Shaksp.

There is no vice more hateful to God and man than ingratitude. Peacham.

What owe I to his commands
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down,
To sit in hateful office here confin'd,
Inhabitant of heav'n, and heav'nly born? Milton.

I hear the tread
Of hateful steps; I must be viewless now. Milton.

But Umbriel, hateful gnome! forbears not so,
He breaks the phial whence the sorrows flow. Pope

2. That feels abhorrence; abhorrent; detesting; malignant; malevolent.

Palamon, compell'd
No more to try the fortune of the field;
And, worse than death, to view with hateful eyes
His rival's conquest. Dryden

HA'TEFULLY, hâte'fûl-è. adv. [from hateful.]

1. Odiously; abominably.
2. Malignantly; maliciously.

Whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master and I wore my life
To spend upon his haters. Shakspeare.

An enemy to God, and a hater of all good. Brown.

They never wanted so much knowledge as to inform and convince them of the unlawfulness of a man's being a murderer, an hater of God, and a covenant-breaker. South.

HA'TRED, hâ'trêd. n. s. [from hate.] Hate; ill-will; malignity; malevolence; dislike; abhorrence; detestation; abomination; the passion contrary to love.

Hatred is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us. Locke.

I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hatred fully. Shakspeare.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of aversation and hostility included in its very essence: but then, if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object. South.

Hatreds are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated in the world. Locke.

Retain no malice nor hatred against any: be ready to do them all the kindness you are able. Wake.

She is a presbyterian of the most rank and virulent kind, and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church. Swift.

Hatred has in it the guilt of murder, and lust the guilt of adultery. Sherlock.

To HA'TTER, hât'tûr. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from batter.] To harass; to weary; to wear out with fatigue.

He's hatter'd out with penance. Dryden.

HAU'BERK, hâw'bêrk.[213] n. s. [hauberg, old French.] A coat of mail; a breastplate.

Him on the hauberk struck the princess sore,
That quite disparted all the linked frame,
And pierced to the skin. Fairy Queen.

Hauberks and helms are hew'd with many a wound;
The mighty maces with such haste descend,

They break the bones, and make the solid armour bend. Dryden.

To HAVE, hâv.[76] v. a. in the present I have, thou hast, he hath; we, ye, they have; pret. and part. pass. had. [haban, Gothick; habban, Saxon; hebben, Dutch; avoir, French; avere, Italian.]

9. To procure; to find.

I would have any one name to me that tongue, that one can speak as he should do, by the rules of grammar. Locke.

10. Not to neglect; not to omit.

I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst! Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself. Shakspeare.

Your plea is good; but still I say beware:
Laws are explain'd by men; so have a care. Pope.

11. To hold; to regard.

Of the maid servants shall I be had in honour. 2 Samuel.

The proud have had me greatly in derision. Psalms.

12. To maintain; to hold opinion.

Sometimes they will have them to be natural heat, whereas some of them are crude and cold; and sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts, whereas they are things by themselves. Bacon.

13. To contain.

You have of these pedlars that have more in 'em than you'd think, sister. Shakspeare.

I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly. Shaksp.

14. To require; to claim.

What would these madmen have?
First they would bribe us without pence,
Deceive us without common sense,
And without pow'r enslave. Dryden.

15. To be a husband or wife to another.

If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him. Shakspeare.

16. To be engaged as in a task or employment.

If we maintain things that are established, we have to strive with a number of heavy prejudices, deeply rooted in the hearts of men. Hooker.

The Spaniard's captain never hath to meddle with his soldiers' pay. Spenser.

Of the evils which hindered the peace and good ordering of that land, the inconvenience of the laws was the first which you had in hand. Spenser.

Kings have to deal with their neighbours, their wives, their children, their prelates or clergy, their nobles, their merchants, and their commons. Bacon.

17. To wish; to desire: in a lax sense.

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. Psalms.

I would have no man discouraged with that kind of life or series of actions, in which the choice of others, or his own necessities, may have engaged him. Addison.

18. To buy.

If these trifles were rated only by art and artfulness, we should have them much cheaper. Collier.

19. It is most used in English, as in other European languages, as an auxiliary verb to make the tenses; have, hast, and hath or has, the preterperfect; and had, and hadst, the preterpluperfect.

If there had been words enow between them to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears. Congreve.

I have heard one of the greatest geniuses this age has produced, who had been trained up in all the polite studies of antiquity, assure me, upon his being obliged to search into records, that he at last took an incredible pleasure in it. Addison.

I have not here considered custom as it makes things easy, but as it renders them delightful: and though others have made the same reflections, it is possible they may not have drawn those uses from it. Iddison.

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon. Addison.

The gods have placed labour before virtue. Add.

This observation we have made on man. Addis.

Evil spirits have contracted in the body habits of lust and sensuality, malice and revenge. Addison.

There torments have already taken root in them. Addison.

That excellent author has shewn how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practise it. Addison.

20. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt. They seem to be imperative expressions; have this at you; let this reach you, or take this; have with you; take this with you: but this will not explain have at it, or have at him, which must be considered as more elliptical; as, we will have a trial at it, or at him.

He that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakspeare.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation: have at it with you. Shaksp.

I never was out at a mad frolick, though this is the maddest I ever undertook: have with you, lady mine; I take you at your word. Dryden.

HA'VEN, hâ'v'n[103] n. s. [haven, Dutch; havre, French.]

1. A port; a harbour; a station for ships.

Love was threatened and promised to him, and his cousin, as both the tempest and haven of their best years. Sidney.

Order for sea is given:
They have put forth the haven. Shaksp.

After an hour and a half sailing, we entered into a good haven, being the port of a fair city. Bacon.

The queen beheld, as soon as day appear'd,
The navy under sail, the haven clear'd. Denham.

We may be shipwreck'd by her breath:
Love, favour'd once with that sweet gale,
Doubles his haste, and fills his sail,
'Till he arrive, where she must prove
The haven, or the rock of love. Waller.

2. A shelter; an asylum.

All places, that the eye of heaven visits,
Are to a wise man ports and happy havens. Shaksp.

HA'VENER, hâ'v'n-ûr. n. s. [from haven.] An overseer of a port.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers, as receiver, havener, and customer. Carew.

HA'VER, hâv'ûr.[98] n. s. [from have.] Possessor; holder.

Valour is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver. Shaksp.

HA'VER, hâv'ûr, is a common word in the northern counties for oats: as, haver bread for oaten bread; perhaps properly aven, from avena, Latin.

When you would anneal, take a blue stone, such as they make haver or oat cakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham.

HAUGHT, hâwt. adj. [haut, French.]

1. Haughty; insolent; proud; contemptuous; arrogant; Obsolete.

The proud insulting queen,
With Clifford and the haught Northumberland

His courage haught,
Desir'd of foreign foemen to be known,
And far abroad for strange adventures sought. Spen.

HA'UGHTILY, hâw'tê-lê. adv. [from haughty.] Proudly; arrogantly; contemptuously.

Her heav'nly form too haughtily she priz'd;
His person hated, and his gifts despis'd. Dryden.

HA'UGHTINESS, hâw'tê-nês. n. s. [from haughty.] Pride; arrogance; the quality of being haughty.

By the head we make known our supplications, our threatenings, our mildness, our haughtiness, our love, and our hatred. Dryden.

HA'UGHTY, hâw'tê.[393] adj. [hautaine, French.]

1. Proud; lofty; insolent; arrogant; contemptuous.

His wife being a woman of a haughty and imperious nature, and of a wit superior to his, quickly resented the disrespect she received from him. Clarendon.

I shall sing of battles, blood and rage,
And haughty souls, that mov'd with mutual hate,
In fighting fields pursu'd and found their fate. Dryden.

2. Proudly great.

Our vanquish'd wills that pleasing force obey:
Her goodness takes our liberty away;
And haughty Britain yields to arbitrary sway. Prior.

3. Bold; adventurous; of high hazard. Obsolete.

Who now shall give me words and sound
Equal unto this haughty enterprize?
Or who shall lend me wings, with which from ground
My lowly verse may loftily arise? Fairy Queen.

HA'VING, hâv'ing. n. s. [from have.]

1. Possession; estate; fortune

My having is not much;
I'll make division of my present with you;
Hold, there's half my coffer. Shaksp.

2. The act or state of possessing.

Of the one side was alledged the having a picture, which the other wanted; of the other side, the first striking the shield. Sidney.

Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion;
And having that do choak their service up,
Even with the having. Shaksp.

3. Behaviour; regularity. This is still retained in the Scotish dialect. It may possibly be the meaning here.

The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild prince and Poinz: he is of too high a region; he knows too much. Shaksp.

HA'VIOUR, hâ'vẽ-ûr. n. s. [from behaviour.] Conduct; manners. Not used.

Their ill haviour garres men missay
Both of their doctrines and their fay. Spenser.

To HAUL, hâwl. v. a. [haler, French, to draw.] To pull; to draw; to drag by violence. A word which, applied to things, implies violence; and, to persons, awkwardness or rudeness. This word is liberally exemplified in hale; etymology is regarded in hale, and pronunciation in haul.

Thy Dol and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison,
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shaksp.

The youth with songs and rhimes,
Some dance, some haul the rope. Denham.

Some the wheels prepare,
And fasten to the horses' feet; the rest
With cables haul along th' unwieldy beast. Dryd.

In his grandeur he naturally chuses to haul up others after him whose accomplishments most resemble his own. Swift.

Thither they bent, and haul'd their ships to land;
The crooked keel divides the yellow sand. Pope.

Romp loving miss
Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson.

HAUL, hâwl. n. s. [from the verb.] Pull; violence in dragging.

The leap, the slap, the haul. Thomson.

In champion countrie a pleasure they take
To mow up their haume for to brew and to bake:
The haume is the straw of the wheat or the rie,
Which once being reaped, they mow by and by. Tusser.

Having stripped off the haum or binds from the poles, as you pick the hops, stack them up. Mort.

HAUNCH, hântsh.[214] n. s. [hancke, Dutch; hanche, French; anca, Italian.]

1. The thigh; the hip.

Hail, groom! didst thou not see a bleeding hind,
Whose right haunch earst my stedfast arrow strake? Spenser.

To make a man able to teach his horse to stop and turn quick, and to rest on his haunches, is of use to a gentleman both in peace and war. Locke.

2. The rear; the hind part

Thou art a summer bird,
Which ever in the haunch of winter sings
The lifting up of day. Shaksp.

To HAUNT, hânt.[214] v. a. [hanter, Fr.]

1. To frequent; to be much about any place or person.

A man who for his hospitality is so much haunted, that no news stir but come to his ears. Sidney.

Now we being brought known unto her, after once we were acquainted, and acquainted we were sooner than ourselves expected, she continually almost haunted us. Sidney.

I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Because some tell me that thou art a king. Shaksp.

She this dangerous forest haunts,
And in sad accents utters her complaints. Waller.

Earth now
Secur'd like to heav'n, a seat where gods might dwell,
Or wander with delight, and love to haunt
Her sacred shades. Milton.

Celestial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;
Diana Cynthus, Ceres Hybla loves. Pope.

2. It is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes unwelcome.

You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house;
I told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of. Shak.

Oh, could I see my country-seat!
There leaning near a gentle brook,
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book;
And there in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town. Swift.

3. It is eminently used of apparitions or spectres that appear in a particular place.

Foul spirits haunt my resting place,
And ghastly visions break my sleep by night. Fairfax.

All these the woes of Oedipus have known,
Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town. Pope.

To HAUNT, hânt. v. n. To be much about; to appear frequently.

I've charg'd thee not to haunt about my doors:
In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
My daughter's not for thee. Shaksp.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate. Shaksp.

HAUNT, hânt. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Place in which one is frequently found

We set toils, nets, gins, snares and traps for beasts and birds in their own haunts and walks. L'Estrange.

To me pertains not, she replies,
To know or care where Cupid flies;
What are his haunts, or which his way,
Where he would dwell, or whither stray. Prior.

A scene where, if a god should cast his sight,
A god might gaze and wonder with delight!
Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd
Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunts survey'd. Pope.

2. Habit of being in a certain place.

The haunt you have got about the courts will one day or another bring your family to beggary. Arbuthnot.

HA'UNTER, hânt'tûr.[98] n. s. [from haunt.] Frequenter; one that is often found in any place.

The ancient Grecians were an ingenious people, of whom the vulgar sort, such as were haunters of theatres, took pleasure in the conceits of Aristophanes. Wotton.

O goddess, haunter of the woodland green,
Queen of the nether skies! Dryden.

HA'VOCK, hâv'vûk.[166] n. s. [hafog, Welsh, devastation.] Waste; wide and general devastation; merciless destruction.

Having been never used to have any thing of their own, they make no spare of any thing, but havock and confusion of all they meet with. Spenser.

Saul made havock of the church. Acts.

Ye gods! what havock does ambition make
Among your works! Addison.

The rabbins, to express the great havock which has been made of the Jews, tell us, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed, as carried rocks of a hundred yards in circumference above three miles into the sea. Addison.

If it had either air or fuel, it must make a greater havock than any history mentions. Cheyne.

HA'VOCK, hâv'vûk. interj. [from the noun.] A word of encouragement to slaughter.

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry havock, kings! Shaksp.

Até by his side,

With her of tarsels and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. To fly at; to attack on the wing.

A faulcon tow'ring in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd. Shaksp.

Whether upward to the moon they go,
Or dream the winter out in caves below,
Or hawk at flies elsewhere, concerns us not to know. Dryden.

3. To force up phlegm with a noise.

Come, sit, sit, and a song.——Shall we clap into 't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice! Shaksp.

She complained of a stinking tough phlegm which she hawked up in the mornings. Wiseman

Blood, cast out of the throat or windpipe, is spit out with a hawking or small cough; that out of the gums is spit out without hawking, coughing, or vomiting. Harvey

4. To sell by proclaiming it in the streets. [from hock, German, a salesman.]

His works were hawk'd in every street;
But seldom rose above a sheet. Swift.

HA'WKED, hâw'kĕd.[366] adj. [from hawk.] Formed like a hawk's bill.

Flat noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawked one unto the Persian, a large and prominent nose unto the Roman. Brown.

HA'WKER, hâw'kûr.[98] n. s. [from hock, German.] One who sells his wares by proclaiming them in the street.

I saw my labours, which had cost me so much thought, bawled about by common hawkers, which I once intended for the consideration of the greatest persons. Swift.

To grace this honour'd day, the queen proclaims,
By herald hawkers, high heroick games:
She summons all her sons; an endless band
Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land. Pope.

HA'WKWEED, hâwk'wēēd. n. s. A plant.

Oxtongue is a species of hawkweed. Miller.

HA'WSES, hâw'sĭz.[99] n. s. [of a ship.] Two round holes under the ship's head or beak, through which the cables pass when she is at anchor. Harris.

HA'WTHORN, hâw'*th*orn. n. s. [hæȝðopn, Saxon.] A species of medlar; the thorn that bears haws; the white thorn.

The use to which hawthorn is applied in England is to make hedges; there are two or three varieties of it about London; but that sort which produces the smallest leaves is preferable, because its branches always grow close together. Miller.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles. Shaksp

Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
The boughs of woodbine or of hawthorn held. Dryden.

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring. Pope.

The hawthorn whitens. Thomson.

Make hay while the sun shines. Camden.

Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears. Shaksp.

We have heats of dungs, and of hays and herbs laid up moist. Bacon.

Or if the earlier season lead
To the tann'd hay cock in the mead. Milton.

Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay rick shut. May.

Some turners turn long and slender sprigs of ivory, as small as an hay stalk. Moxon.

By some hay cock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even song and morn. Dryden.

The best manure for meadows is the bottom of hay mows and hay stacks. Mortimer.

Hay and oats, in the management of a groom, will make ale. Swift.

To dance the HAY. To dance in a ring; probably from dancing round a hay cock.

I will play on the tabor to the worthies,
And let them dance the hay. Shaksp.

This maids think on the hearth they see,
When fires well nigh consumed be,
There dancing hays by two and three,
Just as your fancy casts them. Drayton.

The gum and glist'ning, which with art
And study'd method, in each part
Hangs down,
Looks just as if that day
Snails there had crawl'd the hay. Suckling.

HAY, hā. n. s. [from haie, Fr. a hedge.] A net which encloses the haunt of an animal.

Coneys are destroyed by hays, curs, spaniels, or tumblers, bred up for that purpose. Mortimer.

HA'YMAKER, hā'mā-kûr. n. s. [hay and make.] One employed in drying grass for hay.

As to the return of his health and vigour, were you here, you might enquire of his haymakers. Pope to Swift.

HA'ZARD, hâz'ûrd.[88] n. s. [hazard, Fr. azar, Spanish; haski, Runick, danger.]

1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.

I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shaksp.

I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well. Shaksp.

Where the mind does not perceive connection, there men's opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

2. Danger; chance of danger.

We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the Father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved. Hooker.

The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate. Dryd.

Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers.

3. A game at dice.

The duke playing at hazard, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold. Swift.

To HA'ZARD, hâz'ûrd. v. a. [hazarder, Fr.] To expose to chance; to put into danger.

They might, by persisting in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own estates, and so weaken that part which their places now give. Hooker.

It was not in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a publick charge to hazard himself against a man of private condition. Hayward.

By dealing indifferently mercies to all, you may hazard your own share. Sherlock.

To HA'ZARD, hâz'ûrd. v. n.

1. To try the chance.

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company. Shaksp.

2. To adventure; to run the danger.

She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her foe. Waller.

HA'ZARDABLE, hâz'ûr-dâ-bl. adj. [from hazard.] Venturous; liable to chance.

An hazardable determination it is, unto fluctuating and indifferent effects, to affix a positive type or period. Brown.

HA'ZARDER, hâz'ûr-dûr. n. s. [from hazard.] He who hazards.

HA'ZARDRY, hâz'ûr-drė. n. s. [from hazard.] Temerity; precipitation; rash adventurousness. Obsolete.

Hasty wrath, and heedless hazardry,
Do breed repentance late, and lasting infamy. Spenser.

HA'ZARDOUS, hâz'ûr-dûs. adj. [hazardeux, French, from hazard.] Dangerous; exposed to chance.

Grant that our hazardous attempt prove vain,
We feel the worst, secur'd from greater pain. Dryden.

HA'ZARDOUSLY, hâz'ûr-dûs-lė. adv. [from hazardous.] With danger or chance.

HAZE, hāze. n. s. [The etymology unknown.] Fog; mist.

HA'ZEL, hā'z'l.[102] n. s. [hæȝel, Saxon; corylus, Latin.] Nut tree.

The nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward husk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out. The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit. Miller.

Kate, like the hazel twig,
Is straight and slender, and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shak.

Her chariot is an empty hazel nut. Shaksp.

Why sit we not beneath the grateful shade,
Which hazels, intermix'd with elms, have made? Dryden.

There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist. Woodward.

HA'ZEL, hā'z'l. adj. [from the noun.] Light brown; of the colour of hazel.

Chuse a warm dry soil, that has a good depth of light hazel mould. Mortimer.

HA'ZELLY, hā'z'l-ė. adj. Of the colour of hazel; a light brown.

Uplands consist either of sand, gravel, chalk, rock or stone, hazelly loam, clay, or black mould. Mortimer.

HA'ZY, hā'zė. adj. [from haze.] Dark; foggy; misty.

Our clearest day here is misty and hazy; we see not far, and what we do see is in a bad light. Burnet.

Oft engender'd by the hazy north,
Myriads on myriads, insect armies waft. Thomson.

HE, hė. pronoun. gen. him; plur. they; gen. them. [hy, Dutch; he, Saxon. It seems to have borrowed the plural from ðiȝ, plural ðaȝ, dative ðiȝum.]

1. The man that was named before.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shaksp.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and increase his passion;
Feed and regard him not. Shaksp.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shaksp.

Adam spoke;
So cheer'd he his fair spouse, and she was cheer'd. Milton

When Adam wak'd, he on his side
Leaning half rais'd hung over her. Milton.

Thus talking, hand in hand along they pass'd
On to their blissful bowers. Milton

Extol
Him first, him last, him midst. Milton

HE'ADBOROUGH, hĕd'bŭr-rō. n. s. [head and borough.] A constable; a subordinate constable.

Here lies John Dod, a servant of God, to whom he is gone,
Father or mother, sister or brother, he never knew none;
A headborough and a constable, a man of fame,
The first of his house, and last of his name. Camden.

This none are able to break thorough,
Until they're freed by head of borough. Hudibras.

HE'ADDRESS, hĕd'drĕs. n. s. [head and dress.]

1. The covering of a woman's head.

There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress: I have known it rise and fall. Addison.

If ere with airy horns I planted heads,
Or discompos'd the headdress of a prude. Pope.

2. Any thing resembling a headdress, and prominent on the head.

Among birds the males very often appear in a most beautiful headdress, whether it be a crest, a comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a kind of pinnacle on the very top of the head. Addison.

HE'ADER, hĕd'dŭr.[98] n. s. [from head.]

1. One that heads nails or pins, or the like.

2. The first brick in the angle.

If the header of one side of the wall is toothed as much as the stretcher on the outside, it would be a stronger toothing, and the joints of the headers of one side would be in the middle of the headers of the course they lie upon of the other side. Moxon.

HE'ADGARGLE, hĕd'gär-gl. n. s. [head and gargle.] A disease, I suppose, in cattle.

HE'ADINESS, hĕd'dē-nĕs. n. s. [from heady.] Hurry; rashness; stubbornness; precipitation; obstinacy.

If any will rashly blame such his choice of old and unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning. Spenser.

HE'ADLAND, hĕd'lănd. n. s. [head and land.]

1. Promontory; cape.

An heroick play ought to be an imitation of an heroic poem, and consequently love and valour ought to be the subject of it: both these sir William Davenant began to shadow; but it was so as discoverers draw their maps with headlands and promontories. Dryden.

2. Ground under hedges.

Now down with the grass upon headlands about,
That groweth in shadow so rank and so stout. Tusser.

HE'ADLESS, hĕd'lĕs. adj. [from head.]

1. Without a head; beheaded.

His shining helmet he 'gan soon unlace,
And left his headless body bleeding at the place. Spenser.

Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks. Shakspeare.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcase, and a nameless thing. Denham.

Prickly stubs, instead of trees are found;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

2. Without a chief.

They rested not until they had made the empire stand headless about seventeen years. Raleigh.

3. Obstinate; inconsiderate; ignorant; wanting intellects: perhaps for heedless.

1. Steep; precipitous.

2. Rash; thoughtless.

3. Sudden; precipitate.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples having taught them, never stopt his race, 'till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney.

HE'ADLONG, hĕd'lông. adv. [head and long.]

1. With the head foremost. It is often doubtful whether this word be adjective or adverb.

I'll look no more,
Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong. Shaksp.

Who, while he steering view'd the stars, and bore
His course from Africk to the Latian shore,
Fell headlong down. Dryden.

Headlong from thence the glowing fury springs,
And o'er the Theban palace spreads her wings. Pope.

2. Rashly; without thought; precipitately.

To give Ahab such warning as might infallibly have prevented his destruction, was esteemed by him evil; and to push him on headlong into it, because he was fond of it, was accounted good. South.

Some ask for envi'd pow'r, which public hate
Pursues, and hurries headlong to their fate,
Down go the titles. Dryden.

3. Hastily; without delay or respite.

Unhappy offspring of my teeming womb!
Dragg'd headlong from thy cradle to thy tomb. Dryden.

4. It is very negligently used by Shakspeare.

Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels,
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave. Shaksp.

HE'ADMOULD-SHOT, hĕd'mōld-shŏt. n. s. [head, mould, and shot.] This is when the sutures of the skull, generally the coronal, ride; that is, have their edges shot over one another; which is frequent in infants, and occasions convulsions and death. Quincy.

HE'ADPIECE, hĕd'pēēse. n. s. [head and piece.]

1. Armour for the head; helmet; morion.

I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly entreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel. Sidney.

The word is giv'n; with eager speed they lace
The shining headpiece, and the shield embrace. Dry.

A reason for this fiction of the one-eyed Cyclops, was their wearing a headpiece, or a martial vizor, that had but one sight. Broome.

This champion will not come into the field, before his great blunderbuss can be got ready, his old rusty breastplate scoured, and his cracked headpiece mended. Swift.

2. Understanding; force of mind.

'Tis done by some severals
Of headpiece extraordinary, lower messes
Perchance are to this business purblind. Shaksp

Eumenes had the best headpiece of all Alexander's captains. Prideaux.

HE'ADQUARTERS, hĕd-kwăr-tŭrz. n. s. [head and quarters.] The place of general rendezvous, or lodgment for soldiers. This is properly two words.

HEART-BURNED, hårt'bûrn'd. adj. [heart and burn.] Having the heart inflamed.

How tartly that gentleman looks! I never can see him but I am heart-burn'd an hour after. Shaksp.

HEART-BURNING, hårt'bûr-ning. n. s. [heart and burn.]

1. Pain at the stomach, commonly from an acrid humour.

Fine clean chalk is one of the most noble absorbents, and powerfully corrects and subdues the acrid humours in the stomach: this property renders it very serviceable in the cardialgea, or heart-burning. Woodward.

2. Discontent; secret enmity.

In great changes, when right of inheritance is broke, there will remain much heart-burning and discontent among the meaner people. Swift.

HEART-DEAR, hårt'dêre. adj. Sincerely beloved.

The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it than now,
When your own Percy, when my heart-dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look to see his father
Bring up his pow'rs; but he did long in vain! Shak.

HEART-EASE, hårt'êze. n. s. Quiet; tranquillity.

What infinite heart-ease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy? Shaksp.

HEART-EASING, hårt'êz-ing. adj. Giving quiet.

But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne,
And by men heart-easing mirth. Milton.

HEART-FELT, hårt'fêlt. adj. Felt in the conscience.

What nothing earthly gives or can destroy,
The soul's calm sunshine, and the heart-felt joy,
Is virtue's prize. Pope.

HEART-PEAS, hårt'pèze. n. s. A plant with round seeds in form of peas, of a black colour, having the figure of a heart of a white colour upon each. Miller.

And let fair Venus, that is queen of love,
With her heart-quelling son, upon you smile.
Spenser.

HEART-RENDING, hårt'rên-ding. adj. Killing with anguish.

Heart-rending news, and dreadful to those few
Who her resemble, and her steps pursue;
That death should licence have to rage among
The fair, the wise, the virtuous, and the young!
Waller.

HEART-ROBBING, hårt'rôb-bing. adj. Ecstatick; depriving of thought. Obsolete.

Sweet is thy virtue, as thyself sweet art;
For when on me thou shinedst, late in sadness,
A melting pleasance ran through every part,
And me revived with heart-robbing gladness.
Spenser.

HEART-SICK, hårt'sîk. adj.

1. Pained in mind.

If we be heart-sick or afflicted with an uncertain soul, then we are true desirers of relief and mercy. Taylor.

2. Mortally ill; hurt in the heart.

Good Romeo, hide thyself.
—Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans,
Mist like, infold me from the search of eyes. Shak.

HEARTS-EASE, hårts'èze. n. s. A plant.

Hearts-ease is a sort of violet that blows all summer, and often in winter: it sows itself. Mortimer.

HEART-SORE, hårt'sôre. n. s. That which pains the mind.

Wherever he that godly knight may find,
His only heart-sore and his only foe. Fairy Queen.

HEART-STRING, hårt'strîng. n. s. [string and heart.] The tendons or nerves supposed to brace and sustain the heart.

He was by Jove deprived
Of life himself, and heart-strings of an eagle rived.
Spenser.

How, out of tune on the strings?
—Not so; but yet so false, that he grieves my very heart-strings. Shaksp.

That grates my heart-strings: what should discontent him!
Except he thinks I live too long. Denham.

If thou thinkest thou shalt perish, I cannot blame thee to be sad 'till thy heart-strings crack. Taylor.

There 's the fatal wound
That tears my heart-strings; but he shall be found,
My arms shall hold him. Granville.

HEART-STRUCK, hårt'strûk. adj.

1. Driven to the heart; infixed for ever in the mind.

Who is with him?
——None but the fool who labours to out-jest
His heart-struck injuries. Shaksp.

2. Shocked with fear or dismay.

He added not; for Adam, at the news
Heart-struck, with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound. Milton.

HEART-SWELLING, hårt'swêl-ling. adj. Rankling in the mind.

Drawn into arms, and proof of mortal fight,
Through proud ambition and heart-swelling hate.
Spenser.

HEART-WHOLE, hårt'hwôle.[397] adj.

1. With the affections yet unfixed.

You have not seen me yet, and therefore I am confident you are heart-whole. Dryden.

HEART-WOUNDED, hårt'wôôn-dêd. adj. Filled with passion of love or grief.

Mean time the queen, without reflection due,
Heart-wounded, to the bed of state withdrew. Pope.

HEART-WOUNDING, hårt'wôôn-ding. adj. Filling with grief.

With a shriek heart-wounding loud she cry'd,
While down her cheeks the gushing torrents ran,
Fast falling on her hands. Rowe.

HE'ARTED, hårt'êd. adj. It is only used in composition: as, hard hearted.

He ne'er like bullies coward hearted,
Attacks in publick to be parted. Gay.

To HE'ARTEN, hår't'n.[243] v. a. [from heart.]

1. To encourage; to animate; to stir up.

Palladius blaming those that were slow, heartening them that were forward, but especially with his own example leading them, made an impression into the squadron. Sidney.

My royal father, cheer these noble lords,
And hearten those that fight in your defence;
Unsheath your sword, good father; cry St. George.
Shaksp.

This rare man, Tydides, would prepare;
That he might conquer, hearten'd him. Chapman.
Thus hearten'd well, and flesh'd upon his prey,
The youth may prove a man another day. Dryden.

2. To meliorate or renovate with manure.

The ground one year at rest; forget not then
With richest dung to hearten it again. May.

HEARTH, hårth.[243] n. s. The pavement of a room on which a fire is made; the ground under the chimney.

Hoop'd out of Rome: now this extremity
Hath brought me to this hearth. Shaksp.

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap,
Where thou find'st fires unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry. Shaksp.

Good luck befriend thee, son; for at thy birth
The fairy ladies danc'd upon the hearth. Milton.

The vanquish'd fires withdraw from every place;
Or, full with feeding, sink into a sleep:
Each household genius shews again his face,
And from the hearths the little lares creep. Dryd.

HE'ARTILY, hår'tê-lê. adv. [from hearty.]

1. From the heart; fully.

I bear no malice for my death;
But those that sought it, I could wish more christians;
Be what they will, I heartily forgive them. Shaksp.

If to be sad is to be wise,
I do most heartily despise
Whatever Socrates has said,
Or Tully writ, or Wanley read. Prior.

2. Sincerely; actively; diligently; vigorously.

Where his judgment led him to oppose men on a publick account, he would do it vigorously and heartily; yet the opposition ended there. Atterbury.

3. Eagerly; with desire.

As for my eating heartily of the food, know that anxiety has hindered my eating 'till this moment. Addison.

HE'ARTINESS, hår'tê-nês. n. s. [from hearty.]

1. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

This entertainment may a free face put on; derive a liberty from heartiness, and well become the agent. Shaksp.

2. Vigour; eagerness.

The anger of an enemy represents our faults or admonishes us of our duty, with more heartiness than the kindness of a friend. Taylor.

HE'ARTLESS, hårt'lês. adj. [from heart.] Without courage; spiritless.

I joyed oft to chase the trembling pricket,
Or hunt the heartless hare till she were tame.
Spenser.

Then hopeless, heartless 'gan the cunning thief,
Persuade us die, to stint all further strife. F. Queen.

What, art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?
Turn thee, Benvolio; look upon thy death. Shaksp.

Thousands besides stood mute and heartless there,
Men valiant all; nor was I us'd to fear. Cowley.

The peasants were accustom'd to payments, and grew heartless as they grew poor. Temple.

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,
While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryd.

HE'ARTLESSLY, hårt'lês-lê. adv. [from heartless.] Without courage; faintly; timidly.

HE'ARTLESSNESS, hårt'lês-nês. n. s. [from heartless.] Want of courage or spirit; dejection of mind.

Oak, and the like true hearty timber, being strong in all positions, may be better trusted in cross and transverse work. Wotton.

HEARTY-HALE, hår'tê-hâle. adj. [heart and hale.] Good for the heart.

Vein-healing verven, and head-purging dill,
Sound savory, and basil hearty hale. Spenser.

HEAT, hète.[227] n. s. [heat, hæt, Saxon; heete, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burns by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.

3. Hot weather.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to go naked. Bacon.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.
Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal,

as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Moxon.

5. Fermentation; effervescence.

6. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age: and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

7. The state of being once hot; a single effort.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,
And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden.

They the turn'd lines on golden anvils beat,
Which look as if they struck them at a heat. Tate.

8. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace;
But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryd.

9. Pimples in the face; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces, and broke out in their ribbands. Addison.

10. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action.

They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to dissever them. Sidney.

The friend hath lost his friend;
And the best quarrels, in the heat are curst
By those that feel their sharpness. Shaksp.

It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeased in cool sedate reflection. South.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle or the chace. Atterbury.

One playing at hazard, drew a huge heap of gold: but in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

11. Faction; contest; party rage.

They are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shaksp.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe
Than those distemper'd heats? Dryden.

12. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead it to her
With all the strength and heat of eloquence,
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison.

To HEAT, hēte. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make hot; to endue with the power of burning.

He commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated. Daniel.

2. To cause to ferment.

Hops lying undried heats them, and changes their colour. Mortimer.

3. To make the constitution feverish.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast,
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves and wine heat fools. Shaksp.

Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without increasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot.

4. To warm with vehemence of passion or desire.

A noble emulation heats your breast,
And your own fame now robs you of your rest. Dryden.

5. To agitate the blood and spirits with action.

When he was well heated the younger champion could not stand before him; and we find the elder contended not for the gift, but for the honour. Dryd.

HE'ATER, hē'tŭr.[98] n. s. [from heat.] An iron made hot, and put into a box-iron, to smooth and plait linen.

HEATH, hēth.[227] n. s. [erica, Lat.]

1. A shrub of low stature: the leaves are small, and abide green all the year. Miller.

In Kent they cut up the heath in May, burn it, and spread the ashes. Mortimer.

Oft with bolder wing they soaring dare
The purple heath. Thomson.

2. A place overgrown with heath.

Say from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why,
Upon this blasted heath, you stop our way
With such prophetick greeting? Shaksp.

Health and long life have been found rather on the peak of Derbyshire, and the heaths of Staffordshire, than fertile soils. Temple.

3. A place covered with shrubs of whatever kind.

Some woods of oranges, and heaths of rosemary, will smell a great way into the sea. Bacon.

HEATH-COCK, hēth'kŏk. n. s. [heath and cock.] A large fowl that frequents heaths.

Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant, heath-cock, and powte. Carew's Survey.

HEATH-POUT, hēth'pŏŭt. n. s. [heath and pout.] A bird.

Not heath-pout, or the rarer bird
Which Phasis or Ionia yields,
More pleasing morsels would afford
Than the fat olives of my fields. Dryden.

HEATH-PEAS, hēth'pēze. n. s. A species of bitter VETCH, which see.

HEATH-ROSE, hēth'rōze. n. s. [heath and rose.] A plant. Ainsworth.

HE'ATHEN, hē'th'n.[227] n. s. [heyden, German.] The gentiles; the pagans; the nations unacquainted with the covenant of grace.

Deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name. 1 Chronicles.

If the opinions of others whom we think well of, be a ground of assent, men have reason to be heathens in Japan, mahometans in Turkey, papists in Spain, and protestants in England. Locke.

In a paper of morality, I consider how I may recommend the particular virtues I treat of, by the precepts or examples of the ancient heathens. Addis.

HE'ATHEN, hē'th'n.[103] adj. Gentile; pagan.

It was impossible for a heathen author to relate these things, because, if he had believed them, he would no longer have been a heathen. Addison.

HE'ATHENISH, hē'th'n-ĭsh. adj. [from heathen.]

1. Belonging to the gentiles.

When the apostles of our Lord and Saviour were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, chosen they were, St. Paul excepted; the rest unschooled altogether, and unlettered men. Hooker.

2. Wild; savage; rapacious; cruel.

The Moors did tread under their heathenish feet whatever little they found yet there standing. Spens.

That execrable Cromwell made a heathenish or rather inhuman edict against the episcopal clergy, that they should neither preach, pray in publick, baptize, marry, bury, nor teach school. South.

HE'ATHENISHLY, hē'th'n-ĭsh-lē. adv. [from heathenish.] After the manner of heathens.

HE'ATHENISM, hē'th'n-ĭzm. n. s. [from heathen.] Gentilism; paganism.

It signifies the acknowledgment of the true God, in opposition to heathenism. Hammond.

This sort of land they order the same way with the heathy land. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To HEAVE, hēve.[227] v. a. pret. heaved, anciently hove; part. heaved or hoven.

1. To lift; to raise from the ground.

So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay,
Chain'd on the burning lake; nor ever thence
Had ris'n, or heav'd his head, but that the will
And high permission of all-ruling heaven
Left him at large. Milton.

2. To carry.

Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant him there; and there being seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shakspeare.

3. To raise; to lift.

So daunted, when the giant saw the knight,
His heavy hand he heaved up on high,
And him to dust thought to have batter'd quite. Spenser.

I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth. Shakspeare

He dy'd in fight;
Fought next my person, as in consort fought,
Save when he heav'd his shield in my defence,
And on his naked side receiv'd my wound. Dryden.

4. To cause to swell.

The groans of ghosts that cleave the earth with pain,
And heave it up: they pant and stick half way. Dryd.

The glittering finny swarms
That heave our friths, and crowd upon our shores. Thomson.

5. To force up from the breast.

Made she no verbal quest?
—Yes, once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart. Shaksp.

The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shakspeare.

6. To exalt; to elevate.

Poor shadow, painted queen;
One heav'd on high, to be hurl'd down below. Shaks.

7. To puff; to elate.

The Scots, heav'd up into high hope of victory, took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and march'd into the plain. Hayward.

To HEAVE, hēve. v. n.

1. To pant; to breathe with pain.

'Tis such as you,
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heavings; such as you,
Nourish the cause of his awaking. Shakspeare.

He heaves for breath, which, from his lungs supply'd,
And fetch'd from far, distends his lab'ring side. Dryden.

2. To labour.

The church of England had struggled and heaved at a reformation ever since Wickliff's days. Atterb.

3. To rise with pain; to swell and fall.

Thou hast made my curdled blood run back,
My heart heave up, my hair to rise in bristles. Dryd.

The wand'ring breath was on the wing to part;
Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart. Dryden.

No object affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean: I cannot see the heaving of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment. Addison.

Frequent for breath his panting bosom heaves. Prior.

The heaving tide
In widen'd circles beats on either side. Gay.

4. To keck; to feel a tendency to vomit.

HEAVE, hêve. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Lift; exertion or effort upward.
None could guess whether the next heave of the earthquake would settle them on the first foundation, or swallow them. Dryden.

2. Rising of the breast.
There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them. Shakspeare.

3. Effort to vomit.

4. Struggle to rise.
But after many strains and heaves,
He got up to his saddle eaves. Hudibras.

HEAVE Offering, hêve'ôf-fûr-rîng. n. s. An offering among the Jews.
Ye shall offer a cake of the first of your dough for an heave offering, as ye do the heave offering of the threshing floor. Numbers.

HE'AVEN, hêv'v'n.[103 234] n. s. [heofon, which seems to be derived from heofod, the places overhead, Saxon.]

1. The regions above; the expanse of the sky.
A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven kissing hill. Shakspeare.
Thy race in time to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden.
The words are taken more properly for the air and ether than for the heavens. Raleigh.
This act, with shouts heav'n high, the friendly band
Applaud. Dryden.
Some fires may fall from heav'n. Temple.

2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure souls departed.
It is a knell
That summons thee to heaven or to hell. Shaksp.
These, the late
Heav'n banish'd host, left desert utmost hell. Milt.
All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n fall'n, in station stood, or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton.

3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.
Now heaven help him! Shakspeare.
The will
And high permission of all-ruling heav'n
Left him at large. Milton.
The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophesy, as a testimony of their being sent by heaven. Temple.

4. The pagan gods; the celestials.
Take physic, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just. Shakspeare.
They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know. Shakspeare.
Heav'ns! what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow. Dryden.

5. Elevation; sublimity.
O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heav'n of invention. Shakspeare.

6. It is often used in composition.

HEAVEN-BEGOT, hêv'v'n-bê-gôt'. Begot by a celestial power.
If I am heav'n-begot, assert your son
By some sure sign. Dryden.

HEAVEN-BORN, hêv'v'n-bôrn. Descended from the celestial regions; native of heaven.
If once a fever fires his sulphurous blood,
In ev'ry fit he feels the hand of God,
And heav'n-born flame. Dryden.
Oh heav'n-born sisters! source of art!
Who charm the sense, or mend the heart;
Who lead fair virtue's train along,
Moral truth, and mystick song! Pope.

HEAVEN-BRED, hêv'v'n-brêd. Produced or cultivated in heaven.
Much is the force of heav'n-bred poesy. Shaksp.

HEAVEN-BUILT, hêv'v'n-bîlt. Built by the agency of gods.
His arms had wrought the destin'd fall
Of sacred Troy, and raz'd her heav'n-built wall. Pope.

HEAVEN-DIRECTED, hêv'v'n-dê-rêk'têd.

1. Raised toward the sky.
Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise? Pope.

2. Taught by the powers of heaven.
O sacred weapon; left for truth's defence;
To all but heav'n-directed hands deny'd;
The muse may give it, but the gods must guide. Pope.

HE'AVENLY, hêv'v'n-lê. adj. [from heaven.]

1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.
As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world make one become worldly. Sidney.
Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;
Nor Pindar's heav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a swan. Dryden.

2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.
Adoring first the genius of the place,
Then earth, the mother of the heav'nly race. Dryd.

HE'AVENLY, hêv'v'n-lê. adv.

1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.
In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns,
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.

2. By the agency or influence of heaven.
Truth and peace and love shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, t' whose happy making sight alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

HE'AVENWARD, hêv'v'n-wârd. adv. [heaven and þeapd, Saxon.] Toward heaven.
I prostrate lay,
By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mournful look
Heav'nward erect, determined, thus I spoke. Prior.

HE'AVILY, hêv'ê-lê. adv. [from heavy.]

1. With great ponderousness.

2. Grievously; afflictively.
Ease must be impracticable to the envious: they lie under a double misfortune; common calamities and common blessings fall heavily upon them. Collier.

3. Sorrowfully; with grief.
I came hither to transport the tydings,
Which I have heavily borne. Shakspeare.
This O'Neil took very heavily, because his condition in the army was less pleasant to him. Clarend.

4. With an air of dejection.
Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
—O, I have past a miserable night. Shakspeare.

HE'AVINESS, hêv'vê-nês. n. s. [from heavy.]

1. Ponderousness; the quality of being heavy; weight.
The subject is concerning the heaviness of several bodies, or the proportion that is required betwixt any weight and the power which may move it. Wilkins.

2. Dejection of mind; depression of spirit.
We are, at the hearing of some, more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness; of some more mollified, and softened in mind. Hooker.
Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shakspeare
Let us not burthen our remembrance with
A heaviness that's gone. Shakspeare
Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop; but a good word maketh it glad. Proverbs.
Ye greatly rejoice; though now for a season ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations. 1 Peter

3. Inaptitude to motion or thought; sluggishness; torpidness; dulness of spirit; languidness; languor.
Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight. Shakspeare.
What means this heaviness that hangs upon me?
This lethargy that creeps through all my senses? Addison.
He would not violate that sweet recess,
And found besides a welcome heaviness,
Which seiz'd his eyes. Dryden.
A sensation of drousiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbuthnot.

4. Oppression; crush; affliction: as, the heaviness of taxes.

5. Deepness or richness of soil.
As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce; such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbuthnot.

HE'AVY, hêv'vê.[234] adj. [heapiz, Sax.]

1. Weighty; ponderous; tending strongly to the centre; contrary to light.
Mersennus tells us, that a little child, with an engine of an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Wilkins.

2. Sorrowful; dejected; depressed.
Let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shak.

3. Grievous; oppressive; afflictive.
Menelaus bore an heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind. 2 Mac.
Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakspeare.
If the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. Shakspeare.
Pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakspeare.
Chartres, at the levee,
Tells with a sneer the tydings heavy. Swift.

4. Wanting alacrity; wanting briskness of appearance.
My heavy eyes, you say, confess
A heart to love and grief inclined. Prior.

5. Wanting spirit or rapidity of sentiment; unanimated.
A work was to be done, a heavy writer to be encouraged, and accordingly many thousand copies were bespoke. Swift.

6. Wanting activity; indolent; lazy.
Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd;
But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind. Dryden.

7. Drowsy; dull; torpid.
Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep. Luke.

8. Slow; sluggish.
But let thy spiders that suck up thy venom,
And heavy gaited toads lie in their way. Shaksp.

9. Stupid; foolish.
This heavy headed revel, east and west
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations Shak.
I would not be accounted so base minded, or heavy headed, that I will confess that any of them is for valour, power, or fortune better than myself. Knolles.

10. Burdensome; troublesome; tedious.
I put into thy hands what has been the diversion of some of my idle and heavy hours. Locke.

When alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. Swift.

11. Loaded; incumbered; burdened.

Hearing that there were forces coming against him, and not willing that they should find his men heavy and laden with booty, he returned unto Scotland. Bacon.

12. Not easily digested; not light to the stomach.

Such preparations as retain the oil or fat, are most heavy to the stomach, which makes baked meat hard of digestion. Arbuthnot.

13. Rich in soil; fertile: as, heavy lands.

14. Deep; cumbersome: as, heavy roads.

HEA'VY, hĕv'vē. adv. As an adverb it is only used in composition; heavily.

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the weary beast. Isaiah.

Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Matthew.

HE'BDOMAD, hĕb'dō-măd. n. s. [hebdomas, Latin.] A week; a space of seven days.

Computing by the medical month, the first hebdomad or septenary consists of six days, seventeen hours and a half. Brown.

HEBDO'MADAL, hĕb-dŏm'ă-dăl.[518] } adj.
HEBDO'MADARY, hĕb-dŏm'ă-dăr-ē. } [from hebdomas, Latin.] Weekly; consisting of seven days.

As for hebdomadal periods, or weeks, in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews. Brown.

To HE'BETATE, hĕb'ē-tāte. v. a. [hebeto, Latin; hebeter, French.] To dull; to blunt; to stupify.

The eye, especially if hebetated, might cause the same perception. Harvey.

Beef may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son, but will hebetate and clog his intellectuals. Arbuthnot and Pope.

HEBETA'TION, hĕb-ē-tā'shŭn. n. s. [from hebetate.]

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dulled.

HE'BETUDE, hĕb'ē-tūde. n. s. [hebetudo, Lat.] Dulness; obtuseness; bluntness.

The pestilent seminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, activity or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues. Harvey.

HE'BRAISM, hēb'rā-ĭsm.[335] n. s. [hebraisme, French; hebraismus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.

Milton has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Græcisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into his poem. Spectator.

HE'BRAIST, hēb'rā-ĭst.[503] n. s. [hebræus, Lat.] A man skilled in Hebrew.

HE'BRICIAN, hē-brĭsh'ăn. n. s. [from Hebrew.] One skilful in Hebrew.

The words are more properly taken for the air or ether than the heavens, as the best hebricians understand them. Raleigh.

The nature of the Hebrew verse, as the meanest hebrician knoweth, consists of uneven feet. Peacham.

HE'CATOMB, hĕk'ă-tōm. n. s. [hecatombe, French; ἑκατόμβη.] A sacrifice of a hundred cattle.

In rich men's homes
I bid kill some beasts, but no hecatombs;
None starve, none surfeit so. Donne.

One of these three is a whole hecatomb,
And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.

Her triumphant sons in war succeed,
And slaughtered hecatombs around him bleed. Add.

HE'CTICAL, hĕk'tē-kăl. } adj. [hectique,
HE'CTICK, hĕk'tĭk.[509] } Fr. from ἕξις.]

1. Habitual; constitutional.

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fulness from obstruction. It is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vesssels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.

A hectick fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance, not to be controul'd. Donne.

2. Troubled with a morbid heat.

No hectick student scars the gentle maid. Taylor.

HE'CTICK, hĕk'tĭk. n. s. A hectick fever.

Like the hectick in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakspeare.

HE'CTOR, hĕk'tŭr.[418 166] n. s. [from the name of Hector, the great Homeric warriour.] A bully; a blustering, turbulent, pervicacious, noisy fellow.

Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.

To HE'CTOR, hĕk'tŭr. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of it. Gov. of Tongue.

The weak low spirit fortune makes her slave;
But she 's a drudge, when hector'd by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbuth.

To HE'CTOR, hĕk'tŭr. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stilling fleet.

One would think the hectoring, the storming, the sullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Spectator.

Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants hector. Swift.

HEDERA'CEOUS, hĕd-ĕr-ā'shŭs. adj. [hederaceus, Latin.] Producing ivy. Dict.

HEDGE, hĕdje. n. s. [hezze, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes, or woven twigs.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges' breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.

HEDGE, hĕdje, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class; perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first shew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakspeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-press in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

To HEDGE, hĕdje. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.

Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclus.

Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hosea.

3. To encircle for defence.

England, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shaksp.

There 's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would. Shaks.

4. To shut up within an enclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law: but that is a law to hedge in the cuckow, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange. Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.

You forget yourself
To hedge me in. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

When I was hasty, thou delayd'st me longer:
I pr'ythee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise; for thy life preserv'd. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift.

To HEDGE, hĕdje. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakspeare.

HEDGE-BORN, hĕdje'bŏrn. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shaks.

HEDGE-CREEPER, hĕdje-krēē'pŭr. n. s. [hedge and creep.] One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-FUMITORY, hĕdje-fū'mē-tŭr-ē. n. s. A plant; fumaria sepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG, hĕdje'hŏg. n. s. [hedge and hog; erinaceus.]

1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in a hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which
Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall. Shakspeare.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under part, head, belly, and legs, within his thicket of prickles. Ray.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king?
——I grant ye.
——Do'st grant me, hedge-hog? Shakspeare.

3. A plant; trefoil; medica echinata. Ains.

4. The globe-fish; orbis echinatus. Ains.

HEDGE-HYSSOP, hĕdje-hĭz'zŭp. n. s. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willowort; gratiola.

Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill's Mat. Medica.

HEDGE-MUSTARD, hĕdje-mŭs'tărd. n. s. A plant.

HEDGE-NETTLE, hĕdje-nĕt'tl. n. s. A plant; galeopsia. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-NOTE, hĕdje'nōte. n. s. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant raillery. Dryden.

HEDGE-PIG, hĕdje'pig. n. s. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd,
Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shaksp.

HEDGE-ROW, hĕdje'rō. n. s. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for enclosures.

Sometimes walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.

The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Berkley to Pope.

HEDGE-SPARROW, hĕdje-spăr'rō. n. s. [hedge and sparrow; curruca.] A sparrow that lives in bushes, distinguished from a sparrow that builds in thatch.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had it's head bit off by its young. Shaksp.

HE'DGING-BILL, hĕdje'ĭng-bĭl. n. s. [hedge and bill.] A cutting-hook used in making hedges.

Comes master Dametas with a hedging bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Sidney.

HE'DGER, hĕdje'ŭr. n. s. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.

The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd hedger at his supper sat. Milton.

He would be laughed at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past fifty. Locke.

To HEED, hēēd.[246] v. a. [he∂an, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dryd.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed all the parts of it. Locke.

HEED, hēēd. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With wanting heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running. Milton.

Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.

Thou must take heed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company. Shakspeare.

Take heed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakspeare.

3. Care to avoid.

We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson.

4. Notice; observation.

Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.

5. Seriousness; staidness.

He did unseal them; and the first he viewed,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance. Shakspeare.

6. Regard; respectful notice.

It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no heed is given to what he says. L'Estrange.

HE'EDFUL, hēēd'fŭl. adj. [from heed.]

1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.

Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgments join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakspeare.

2. Attentive; careful; observing: with of.

I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late ent'ring at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shakspeare.

To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shak.

Thou, heedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope.

HE'EDFULLY, hēēd'fŭl-ē. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, and heedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.

HE'EDFULNESS, hēēd'fŭl-nĕs. n. s. [from heedful.] Caution; vigilance; attention.

HE'EDLESS, hēēd'lĕs. adj. [from heed.] Negligent; inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unobserving: with of.

The heedless lover does not know
Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Waller.

Heedless of verse, and hopeless of the crown,
Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown. Dryd.

Some ideas which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Locke.

Surprises are often fatal to heedless unguarded innocence. Sherlock.

HE'EDLESSLY, hēēd'lĕs-lē. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.

Whilst ye discharge the duties of matrimony, ye heedlessly slide into sin. Arbuthnot and Pope.

HE'EDLESSNESS, hēēd'lĕs-nĕs. n. s. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.

In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be pitied, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedlessness. Locke.

HEEL, hēēl.[246] n. s. [hele, Saxon.]

1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.

If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. The whole foot of animals.

The stag recals his strength, his speed,
His winged heels, and then his armed head;
With these t' avoid, with that his fate to meet;
But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet. Den.

Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. Addison.

3. The feet, as employed in flight.

Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tygers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for 't. L'Estr.

4. To be at the HEELS. To pursue closely; to follow hard.

Sir, when comes your book forth?
—Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakspeare.

But is there no sequel at the heels of this
Mother's admiration? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

5. To attend closely.

Could we break our way
By force, and at our heels all hell should rise
With blackest insurrection, to confound
Heav'n's purest light. Milton.

6. To pursue as an enemy.

The Spaniards fled on towards the north to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels, until they were fain to give them over for want of powder. Bacon.

Want! hungry want! that hungry meagre fiend,
Is at my heels, and chaces me in view. Otway.

7. To follow close as a dependant.

Through proud London he came sighing on,
After the admired heels of Bolingbroke. Shaksp.

8. To lay by the HEELS. To fetter; to shackle; to put in gyves.

If the king blame me for 't, I'll lay ye all
By th' heels, and suddenly; and on your heads
Clap round fines for neglect. Shakspeare.

One half of man, his mind,
Is, sui juris, unconfin'd,
And cannot be laid by the heels. Hudibras.

I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummers; and wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison.

9. Any thing shaped like a heel.

At the other side is a kind of heel or knob, to break clots with. Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. The back part of a stocking: whence the phrase to be out at heels, to be worn out.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. Shakspeare.

To HEEL, hēēl. v. n. [from the noun.]

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk. Shaksp.

2. To lean on one side: as, the ship heels.

To HEEL, hēēl. v. a. To arm a cock.

HE'ELER, hēēl'ŭr. n. s. [from heel] A cock that strikes well with his heels.

HE'EL-PIECE, hēēl'pēse. n. s. [heel and piece.] A piece fixed on the hinder part of the shoe, to supply what is worn away.

To HE'EL-PIECE, hēēl'pēse. v. a. [heel and piece.] To put a piece of leather on a shoe heel.

Some blamed Mrs. Bull for new heel-piecing her shoes. Arbuthnot.

HEFT, hĕft. n. s. [from heave.]

1. Heaving; effort.

May be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink; depart,
And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge
Is not infected: but if one present
Th' abhorrent ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent hefts. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

2. [for haft.] Handle.

His oily side devours both blade and heft. Waller.

HE'GIRA, hē-jī'rā or hĕd'jē-rā. n. s. [Arabick.] A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabians and Turks, who begin their computation from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which happened on Friday, July 16, A. D. 622, under the reign of the emperor Heraclius.

Harris

HEI'FER, hĕf'fŭr.[98 254] n. s. [heapope, Saxon.] A young cow.

Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh,
And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter?
Shakspeare.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Bacon.

For her the flocks refuse their verdant food,
Nor thirsty heifers seek the gliding flood. Pope.

HEIGH-HO, hī'hō. interj.

1. An expression of slight languor and uneasiness.

Heigh-ho! an't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd. Shakspeare.

2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation.

We'll toss off our ale 'till we cannot stand,
And heigh-ho for the honour of old England. Dry.

HEIGHT, hīte or hāte.[263] n. s. [from high.]

1. Elevation above the ground: indefinite.

Into what pit thou seest,
From what height fall'n. Milton.

An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addison.

2. Altitude; definite space measured upward.

Abroad I'll study thee,
As he removes far off, that great heights takes. Donne.

There is in Ticinium a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty. Bacon.

An amphitheatre appeared
Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

3. Degree of latitude. Latitudes are higher as they approach the pole.

Guinea lieth to the north sea, in the same height as Peru to the south. Abbot.

4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence; high place.

From Alpine heights the father first descends;
His daughter's husband in the plain attends. Dryd.

5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity; great degree of excellence.

By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd. Shaks.

Ten kings had from the Norman conqu'ror reign'd,
When England to her greatest height attain'd,
Of pow'r dominion, glory, wealth, and state. Dan.

Every man of learning need not enter into their difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.

6. The utmost degree; full completion.

Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once. Bacon.

Did not she
Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
The secret, wrested from me in the height
Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton.

Hide me from the face
Of God, whom to behold was then my height
Of happiness! Milton.

Despair is the height of madness. Sherlock.

7. Utmost exertion.

Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding. Shakspeare.

To HEI'GHTEN, hī't'n.[103] v. a. [from height.]

1. To raise higher.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

3. To aggravate.

Foreign states used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war. Addison.

4. To improve by decorations.

As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden.

HE'INOUS, hā'nŭs.[249] adj. [haineux, Fr. from hane, hate; or from the Teutonick, hoon, shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooker.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakspeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson.

HE'INOUSLY, hā'nŭs-lē. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

HE'INOUSNESS, hā'nŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences, provoking God, as jests and trifles, must have little sense of the heinousness of them. Rogers.

HEIR, āre.[249 394] n. s. [heire, old French; hæres, Latin.]

1. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Locke.

What Lady is that?
—The heir of Alanson, Rosaline her name. Shaks.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do it. Shakspeare.

Being heirs together of the grace of life. 1 Pet.

Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,
And I his heir in misery alone. Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

2. One newly inheriting an estate.

The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate. Swift.

To HEIR, āre. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His son in blooming youth was snatch'd by fate,
One only daughter heir'd the royal state. Dryden.

HE'IRESS, āre'ĭs.[99] n. s. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive;
All that was her's to him did give. Waller.

Æneas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryden.

HE'IRLESS, āre'lĕs. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
That heirless it hath made my kingdom. Shaksp.

HE'IRLOOM, āre'lōōm. n. s. [heir and ȝeloma, goods, Saxon.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,
Transmitted to the hero's line;
Thence through a long descent of kings,
Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.

HE'IRSHIP, āre'shĭp. n. s. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will to build an hospital within a year, under pain of his being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe.

HELD, hĕld. The preterit and part. pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Ecclesiastes.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design. Dryden.

HE'LIACAL, hē-lī'ă-kăl. adj. [heliaque, French, from ἥλιος.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal ascent. Brown.

HE'LIACALLY, hē-lī'ă-kăl-lē. adv. [from heliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emersion from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the summer, when he rises heliacally; and rainy in the winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.

HE'LICAL, hĕl'ē-kăl. adj. [helice, French, from ἕλιξ.] Spiral; with many circumvolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vectis at one end of it. Wilkins.

HELIOCE'NTRICK, hē-lē-ō-sĕn'trĭk. adj. [heliocentrique, Fr. ἥλιος and κέντρον.]

The heliocentrick place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.

HE'LIOID Parabola, hē'lē-ŏĭd-pă-răb'bō-lă, in mathematicks, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge toward the centre of the said circle. Harris.

HE'LIOSCOPE, hē'lē-ō-skōpe. n. s. [helioscope, Fr. ἥλιος and σκοπέω.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.

HE'LIOTROPE, hē'lē-ō-trōpe. n. s. [ἥλιος and τρέπω; heliotrope, Fr. heliotrophium, Lat.] A plant that turns toward the sun; but more particularly the turnsol, or sunflower.

'Tis an observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather. Gov. of the Tongue.

HE'LISPHERICAL, hē-lĭs-fĕr'ē-kăl. adj. [helix and sphere.]

The helispherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it. Harris.

HE'LIX, hē'lĭks. n. s. [helice, French; ἕλιξ.] Part of a spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every helix does contain. Wilkins.

HELL, hĕl. n. s. [helle, Saxon.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven or to hell. Shaksp.

If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key. Shaksp.

Let none admire
That riches grow in hell; that soil may best
Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold
The glorious light he forfeited of old. Cowley.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.

I will go down to my son mourning to hell. Gen.
He descended into hell. Apostles' Creed.

3. Temporal death.

The pains of hell came about me; the snares of death overtook me. Psalms.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;
They of both ends the middle two do fly;
The two that in mid-place, hell called were,
Must strive with waiting foot and watching eye,
To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,
That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Sidney.

5. The place into which the tailor throws his shreds.

This trusty squire, he had as well
As the bold Trojan knight seen hell;
Not with a counterfeited pass
Of golden bough, but true gold-lace. Hudibras.

In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,
Who might deserve a place in his own hell.
King's Cookery.

6. The infernal powers.

Much danger first, much toil did he sustain,
While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in vain.
Cowley.

7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK, hĕl'blăk. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur'd, would have boil'd up,
And quench'd the stelled fires. Shaksp.

HELL-BRED, hĕl'brĕd. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With foul enfouldred smoak and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth into the skies. Spen.

HELL-BROTH, hĕl'brŏth. n. s. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing;
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shaksp.

HELL-DOOMED, hĕl'dōōmd. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.

And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,
Hell-doom'd! and breath'st defiance here and scorn,
Where I reign'd king? Milton.

HELL-GOVERNED, hĕl'gŭv-ŭrnd. adj. Directed by hell.

Earth gape open wide and ate him quick,
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm has butcher'd. Shaks.

HELL-HATED, hĕl'hā-tĕd. adj. Abhorred like hell.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shak.

HELL-HAUNTED, hĕl'hân-tĕd. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,
And bid me stand exposed to the bleak winds,
Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Dryd.

HELL-HOUND, hĕl'hound. n. s. [helle hund, Sax.]

1. Dog of hell.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept,
A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death. Shaks.

Now the hell-hounds with superior speed
Had reach'd the dame, and fast'ning on her side,
The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd. Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

I call'd
My hell-hounds to lick up the draff, and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton.

HELL-KITE, hĕl'kite. n. s. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

Did you say all? What all? Oh, hell-kite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop? Shaksp.

HE'LLEBORE, hĕl'lĕ-bōre. n. s. [helleborus, Latin.] Christmas flower.

HE'LLEBORE White, hĕl'lĕ-bōre. n. s. [veratrum, Latin.] A plant.

That place is earth, the seat of man, that light
His day, which else, as th' other hemisphere,
Night would invade. Milton.

A hill
Of Paradise, the highest from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken
Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect lay. Milton.

The sun is more powerful in the northern hemisphere, and in the apogeum; for therein his motion is slower. Brown.

In open prospect nothing bounds our eye,

Until the earth seems join'd unto the sky;
So in this hemisphere our utmost view
Is only bounded by our king and you. Dryden.

HEMISPHE'RICAL, hĕm-ĕ-sfĕr'ĭk-ăl.[509] } HEMISPHE'RICK, hĕm-ĕ-sfĕr'ĭk. } adj. [from hemisphere.] Half round; containing half a globe.

HE'NBIT, hĕn'bĭt. n. s. [alsine foliis hederaceis.] A plant.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Derham's Phys. Theology.

HENCE, hĕnse. adv. or interj. [heonan, Sax. hennes, old English.]

1. From this place to another.

Discharge my follow'rs; let them hence away,
From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair-day. Shakspeare.

Th' Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence. Milton.

A sullen prudence drew thee hence
From noise, fraud, and impertinence. Roscom.

2. Away; to a distance. A word of command.

Be not found here: hence with your little ones. Shakspeare.

Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse. Milton.

3. At a distance; in another place. Not in use.

Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth? Shakspeare.

All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinewed to this action. Shakspeare.

4. From this time; in the future.

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.

Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants. Arbuth.

5. For this reason; in consequence of this.

Hence perhaps it is that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom. Tillotson.

6. From this cause; from this ground.

By too strong a projectile motion the aliment tends to putrefaction: hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion. Arbuthnot.

7. From this source; from this original; from this store.

My Flora was my sun; for as
One sun, so but one Flora was;
All other faces borrowed hence
Their light and grace as stars do thence. Suckling.

8. From hence is a vitious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten. Hence signifies from this.

An ancient author prophesy'd from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince! Dryd.

To HENCE, hĕnse. v. a. [from the adverb.] To send off; to dispatch to a distance. Obsolete.

Go, bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me;
With that his dog he henc'd, his flock he curs'd. Sidney.

HENCEFO'RTH, hĕnse'fŏrth. adv. [heonoforð, Sax.] From this time forward.

Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy. Shaksp.

Happier thou may'st be, worthier can'st not be;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess. Milton.

I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
'Till day droop. Milton.

If we treat gallant soldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come? Dryden.

HENCEFO'RWARD, hĕnse-fŏr'wărd. adv. [hence and forward.] From this time to futurity.

Henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns. Shaksp.

Pardon, I beseech you;
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you. Shaksp.

The royal academy will admit henceforward only such who are endued with good qualities. Dryden.

HE'NCHMAN, hĕnsh'măn. n. s. [hync, a servant, and man, Skinner; hengrc, a horse, and man, Spelman.] A page; an attendant. Obsolete.

Why should Titania cross her Oberon:
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman. Shaksp.

Three henchmen were for ev'ry knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind. Dryden.

To HEND, hĕnd. v. a. [hendan, Saxon, from hendo, low Latin, which seems borrowed from hand or hond, Teutonick.]

1. To seize; to lay hold on.

With that the serjeants hent the young man stout,
And bound him likewise in a worthless chain. Fairf.

2. To crowd; to surround. Perhaps the following passage is corrupt, and should be read hemmed; or it may mean to take possession.

The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering. Shaksp.

HE'PTARCHY, hĕp'tăr-kē. n. s. [heptarchie, French; ἑπτὰ and ἀρχή.] A sevenfold government.

In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans, of whom they descended, used shields. Camden.

England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The next returning planetary hour
Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of pow'r,
His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryd.

HER, hûr.[98] pron. [hepa, hep, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shaksp. As you like it.

Still new favourites she chose,
'Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sov'reign pow'r;
Wond'rous beautiful her face;
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were unfit,
And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shaksp. Henry V.

She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.

The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again. Cowley.

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryd.

HERS, hûrz. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms as hers.

This pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shaks.

Thine own unworthiness,
Will still that thou art mine not hers confess. Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not hers but yours. Dryd.

HE'RALD, hĕr'ăld. n. s. [herault, Fr. herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,
For strict degrees of rank or title look;
'Tis 'gainst the manner of an epigram,
And I a poet here, no herald am. Ben Jonson.

When time shall serve let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden.

Please thy pride and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shaksp.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shaksp.

3. A proclaimer; a publisher.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shaksp.

To HE'RALD, hĕr'ăld. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as by a herald. Not used.

We are sent from our royal master,
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee. Shakspeare.

In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden.

2. Registry of genealogies.

'Twas no false heraldry when madness drew
Her pedigree from those who too much knew. Denham.

3. Blazonry.

Metals may blazon common beauties; she
Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry. Cleav.

HERB, ĕrb.[394] n. s. [herbe, Fr. herba, Latin.]

Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grass and hemlock. Locke.

In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Æson. Shaksp.

With sweet-smelling herbs
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milton.

Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie
Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.

If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs, as sage and mint. Watts.

Herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbuthnot.

HERB Christopher, or Bane-berries, ĕrb. n. s. A plant.

HERBA'CEOUS, hĕr-bā'shŭs.[356] adj. [from herba, Lat.]

1. Belonging to herbs.

Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk; but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water flower-de-luce. Brown.

2. Feeding on vegetables; perhaps not properly.

Their teeth are fitted to their food, the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derham.

HE'RBAGE, ĕr'bĭdje.[90 394] n. s. [herbage, French.]

1. Herbs collectively; grass; pasture.

Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields. Dryden.

At the time the deluge came, the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals. Woodward.

2. The tithe and the right of pasture. Ains.

HE'RBAL, hĕr'băl. n. s. [from herb.] A book containing the names and descriptions of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbals, and other like books of natural history. Bacon.

Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature. Brown.

As for the medicinal use of plants, the large herbals are ample testimonies thereof. Moore.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants. Baker.

HE'RBALIST, hĕr'bă-lĭst. n. s. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.

Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder. Brown.

HE'RBAR, hĕr'băr. n. s. [A word, I believe, only to be found in Spenser.] Herb; plant.

The roof hereof was arched over head,
And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintily. Fairy Queen.

HE'RBARIST, hĕr'bă-rĭst. n. s. [herbarius, from herba, Lat.] One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

He was too much swayed by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours, or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, were sufficient to constitute a specifick difference. Ray.

As to the fuci, their seed hath been discovered and shewed me first by an ingenious herbarist. Derham.

HE'RBELET, hĕr'bē-lĕt. n. s. [diminutive of herb, or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.

HE'RDSMAN, hêrdz'mân. } and man.] One employed in tending herds: formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,
In whom no evil did reign, or good appear. Sidney.

And you, enchantment,
Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou
These rural latches to his entrance open,
I will devise a cruel death to thee. Shaksp.

Scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheephook, or have learn'd ought else the least
That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs. Milt.

There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herd,
At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milton.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryd.

The herdsmen, round
The chearful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd. Dryden.

When their herdsmen could not agree, they parted by consent. Locke.

HE'RESY, hĕr'ĕ-sē. n. s. [heresie, French; hæresis, Latin; αἵρεσις.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholick and orthodox church.

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and disloyalty. King Charles.

HE'RETICK, hĕr'ĕ-tĭk.[510] n. s. [heretique, French; αἱρετικὸς.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholick church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread
Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means protestants; when a protestant uses the word, he means any person wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errours. Watts.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith. Shakspeare.

HERE'TICAL, hĕ-rĕt'ĕ-kăl. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who, in their opinion, not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HERE'TICALLY. hĕ-rĕt'ĕ-kăl-ē. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETO', hĕre-tōō'. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFO'RE, hĕre-tō-fōre'. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently

I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more
Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO', hĕre-ŭn-tōō'. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whoso assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker.

Agreeable hereunto might not be amiss to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.

HEREWI'TH, hĕre-wĭth'. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismaid,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Spenser.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surprised by the Scots. Hayward.

HE'RIOT, hĕr'ĕ-ŏt. n. s. [heregild, Sax.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispenseth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Howel.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleav.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryd.

HE'RITABLE, hĕr'ĕ-tă-bl. adj. [hæres, Lat.] Capable to inherit whatever may be inherited.

HERMAPHRODI'TICAL, hĕr-măf-frō-dĭt'ĕ-kăl. adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality of different forms Brown.

HERME'TICAL, hĕr-mĕt'ĕ-kăl. } adj.
HERME'TICK, hĕr-mĕt'ĭk.[509] } [from Hermes, or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, Fr.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Boyle.

HERME'TICALLY, hĕr-mĕt'ĕ-kăl-ē. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chymick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper: and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air, and keep out the insects; no living thing was ever produced there. Bentley.

HE'RMIT, hĕr'mĭt. n. s. [hermite, Fr. contracted from eremite, ἐρημίτης.]

1. A solitary; an anchoret; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, fivescore winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shaksp.

You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render. Bacon.

He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison.

2. A beadsman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermit. Shaksp.

HE'RMITAGE, hĕr'mĭt-ăje.[90] n. s. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass
Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
And eke a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen.

Go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world. Shak.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of ev'ry star that heaven doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew. Milton.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage; it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison.

HE'RMITESS, hĕr'mĭt-tĕs n. s. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.

HERMI'TICAL, hĕr-mĭt'ĕ-kăl. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HE'RMODACTYL, hĕr'mō-dăk-tĭl. n. s. [ἕρμης and δάκτυλος.]

Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used Hill.

HERN, hĕrn. n. s. [contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern. Peacham.

HE'RNHILL, hĕrn'hĭl. n. s. [hern and hill.] An herb. Ainsworth.

HE'RNIA, hĕr'nē-ă. n. s. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed. Wiseman.

HE'RO, hē'rō. n. s. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.

I sing of heroes and of kings,
In mighty numbers mighty things. Cowley.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope.

These are thy honours, not that here thy bust
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust. Pope.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect: as, a hero in learning.

HE'ROESS, hê'rô-ês. n. s. [from hero; herois, Lat.] A heroine; a female hero. Not in use.

In which were held, by sad disease,
Heroes and heroesses. Chapman.

HERO'ICAL, hê-rô'ê-kâl. adj. [from hero.] Befitting a hero; noble; illustrious; heroick.

Musidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprizes. Sidney.

Though you have courage in an heroical degree,
I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryd.

HERO'ICALLY, hê-rô'ê-kâl-ê. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to a hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;
And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

HERO'ICK, hê-rô'îk. adj. [from hero; heroique, French.]

1. Productive of heroes.

Bolingbroke,
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shaksp.

2. Noble; suitable to a hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroic name
To person, or to poem. Milton.

Verse makes heroic virtue live,
But you can life to virtue give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

Methinks heroick poesy, 'till now,
Like some fantastick fairy land did show. Cowley.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire; I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war. Dryden.

An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HERO'ICKLY, hê-rô'îk-lê. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to a hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd
A life heroick. Milton.

HE'ROINE, hêr'ô-în.[535] n. s. [from hero; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.

But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryd.

Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HE'ROISM, hêr'ô-îzm.[535] n. s. [heroisme, French.] The qualities or character of a hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broome.

HE'RON, hêr'ûn.[166] n. s. [heron, Fr.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So lords, with sports of stag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.

The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.

The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
Who terrour bears upon his soaring wing;
Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HE'RONRY, hêr'ûn-rê.[166] } n. s. [from
HE'RONSHAW, hêr'ûn-shâw. } heron, commonly pronounced hernry.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham.

HE'RPES, hêr'pêz. n. s. [ἕρπις.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers. Quincy.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens. Wiseman.

HE'RRING, hêr'ring. n. s. [hareng, Fr. hæpinʒ, Saxon.] A small sea fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackrel, and cod. Carew.

Buy my herring fresh. Swift.

HERS, hûrz. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers. See HER.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;
If so, my eyes are oftener wash'd than hers. Shaks.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.

I see her rowling eyes;
And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

HERSE, hêrse. n. s. [hersia, low Latin; supposed to come from herian, to praise.] This is likewise written hearse; see HEARSE.

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Roscommon.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent herses shall besiege your gates. Pope.

To HERSE, hêrse. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a herse.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were hers'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shaksp.

The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse,
And hers'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.

The house is hers'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree. Crashaw.

HERSELF, hûr-sêlf.' pronoun.

1. A female individual, as distinguished from others.

The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shaksp.

2. Being in her own power; mistress of her own thoughts.

The more she looks, the more her fears increase,
At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryd.

3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun: as, she hurt herself.

The daughter of Pharoah came down to wash herself. Exodus.

She returned answer to herself. Judges.

HE'RSELIKE, hêrse'like. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals.

Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herselike airs as carols. Bacon.

To HE'RY, hê'rê. v. a. [herian, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, now nis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to hery, nor with love to play;
Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.

But were thy years green as now be mine,
Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,
And hery with hymns thy lass's glove. Spenser.

HE'SITANCY, hêz'ê-tân-sê. n. s. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to show that they believed their own reasonings. Atterbury.

To HE'SITATE, hêz'ê-tâte. v. a. [hæsito, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope

HESITA'TION, hêz-ê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.

I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peruser. Woodward.

2. Intermission of speech; want of volubility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitation. Swift.

HEST, hêst. n. s. [hæꝛt, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written behest.

Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely hests despise. Spenser.

Thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhorr'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests. Shaksp.

HE'TEROCLITE, hêt'êr-ô-klite.[166] n. s. [heteroclite, Fr. heteroclitum, Latin; ἕτερος and κλίνω.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke.

The heteroclite nouns of the Latin, should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLI'TICAL, hêt-êr-rô-klît'ê-kâl. adj. [from heteroclite.] Deviating from the common rule.

In the mention of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown.

HE'TERODOX, hêt'êr-ô-dôks. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἕτερος and δοξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HE'TERODOX, hĕt'ĕr-ò-dŏks. n. s. An opinion peculiar.

Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown.

HETEROGE'NEAL, hĕt-ĕr-ò-jè'nè-ăl. adj. [heterogene, Fr. ἕτερος and γένος.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneal towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneal, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneal, and dissimilar. Newton.

HETEROGENE'ITY, hĕt-ĕr-ò-jè-nè'ĕ-tè. n. s. [heterogeneité, Fr. from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and soot, whereas the same wood distilled into a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water, and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGE'NEOUS, hĕt-ĕr-ò-jè'nè-ŭs. adj. [ἕτερος and γένος.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have observed such heterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mass of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETERO'SCIANS, hĕt-ĕr-ŏs'shè-ănz. n. s. [ἕτερος and σκία.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the tropick fall at noon always to the north.

To HEW, hū. v. a. part. hewn or hewed. [heapan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain.
Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for 't. Shaksp.

He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryd.

3. To cut, as with an axe: with the particles down, when it signifies to fell; up, to excavate from below; off, to separate.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shaksp.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance, and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. Shaks.

Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint.
Shakspeare.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.

He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage.
Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with out.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that heweth him out a sepulchre on high. Isaiah.

Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. King Charles.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.

Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone. Mortimer.

I now pass'd my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new.
Pope to Swift.

HE'WER, hū'ûr.[98] n. s. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown.

HE'XAGON, hĕks'ă-gŏn.[166] n. s. [hexagone, French; ἕξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXA'GONAL, hĕgz-ăg'ò-năl.[478] adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six cornered. Brown.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray.

HEXA'GONY, hĕgz-ăg'gŭn-è.[478] n. s. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians?
Bramhall against Hobbes.

HEXA'METER, hĕgz-ăm'è-tûr.[518] n. s. [ἕξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick. Dryden.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal. Woodw.

HE'XAPOD, hĕks'ă-pŏd. n. s. [ἕξ and πόδες.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come, for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Ray.

HEXA'STICK, hĕgz-ăs'tĭk.[509] n. s. [ἕξ and στίχος.] A poem of six lines.

HEY, hā. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation: the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the town with peaceful lyrick;
Then hey for praise and panegyrick. Prior.

HEY'DAY, hā'dā. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolick and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

Thoul't say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him.
Shakspeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday! Hudibras.

HEY'DAY, hā'dā.[269] n. s. A frolick; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it 's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shaksp.

HE'YDEGIVES, hā'dè-gĭvz. n. s. A wild frolick dance. Obsolete.

But friendly fairies met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces. Spen.

HIA'TION, hī-ā'shŭn. n. s. [from hio, Lat.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open the camelion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown.

HIA'TUS, hī-ā'tŭs. n. s. [hiatus, Latin.]

1. An aperture; a gaping breach.

Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below opens into and communicates with it. Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.

HIBE'RNAL, hī-bĕr'năl. adj. [hibernus, Latin.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion. Brown.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS, hĭk'shŭs-dŏk'-shŭs. n. s. [Corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this, or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
And hiccius doccius play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudib.

HICCO'UGH, hĭk'kŭp or hĭk'kŏf. n. s. [hicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing sobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if he had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cleavel.

Sneezing cureth the hiccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown.

If the stomach be hurt, singultus or hiccough follows. Wiseman.

To HI'CCOUGH, hĭk'kŭp. v. n. [from the noun.] To sob with convulsion of the stomach.

To HI'CKUP, hĭk'kŭp. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To sob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up;
Or, when I 'm in a fit, to hickup. Hudibras.

HI'CKWALL, HI'CKWAY, hĭk'wăl. hĭk'wā. n. s. A bird. Ainsworth.

HID, hĭd. HI'DDEN, hĭd'd'n. The part. pass. of hide.

Thus fame shall be atchiev'd, renown on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.

Other hidden cause
Left them superior. Milton.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night:
God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

To HIDE, hīde. v. a. pret. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hĭdan, Sax.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avaunt, and quit my sight; let the earth hide thee! Shakspeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakspeare.

Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

Thus the sire of gods and men below:
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryd.
The sev'ral parts lay hidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.
Then for my corps a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.
Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryd.
With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection? Addison.
The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.
Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
Is fill'd with peace. Rowe.

To HIDE, hide. v. n. To lie hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.
Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade:
Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,
Weakness or delicacy. Pope.

HIDE and SEEK, hide-ând-sêêk'. n. s. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Gulliver.

HIDE, hide. n. s. [hýðe, Sax. haude, Dutch.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon past
Through nine bull hides each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.
Pisistratus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tyger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shakspeare.
His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, hyde, French; hida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till.] Ainsw.

One of the first things was a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Wotton.

HIDEBOU'ND, hide'bôûnd. adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from overriding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.
2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it. Bacon.
Like stinted hidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

And still the harsher and hidebounder
The damsels prove, become the fonder. Hudibras.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious. Ainsworth.

HI'DEOUS, hîd'ê-ûs or hîd'jê-ûs.[293] adj. [hideux, French.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney.
Some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be shewn. Shakspeare.
I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back resounded death. Milt.
Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissings fill the place,
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of risible objects: the following use is less authorized.

'Tis forced through the hiatuses at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward.

3. It is used by Spenser in a sense not now retained; detestable.

O hideous hanger of dominion! Spenser.

HI'DEOUSLY, hîd'ê-ûs-lê. adv. [from hideous.] Horribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shaksp.
This, in the present application, is hideously profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier.

HI'DEOUSNESS, hîd'ê-ûs-nês. n. s. [from hideous.] Horribleness; dreadfulness; terrour.

HI'DER, hî'dûr.[98] n. s. [from the verb.] He that hides.

To HIE, hî. v. n. [hiegan, Saxon.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies. Fairy Queen.
My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shaksp.
Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shaks.
Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel.
The snake no sooner hist,
But virtue heard it, and away she hy'd. Crashaw.
Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour, he hies. Milton.
Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.
The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryd.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster thither hy'd him. Crashaw.

HI'ERARCH, hî'ê-râRk. n. s. [ἱερος and ἀρχη; hierarque, Fr.] The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milton.

HIERA'RCHICAL, hî-ê-râr'kê-kâl. adj. [hierarchique, Fr.] Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

HI'ERARCHY, hî'ê-râr-kê. n. s. [hierarchie, French.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchies of angels sheen,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairfax.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.
Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchy,
The world survey'd. Sandys.
These the supreme king
Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright. Milton.
The blessedest of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Howel.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.
While the old Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices. South.
Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops. Swift.

HIEROGLY'PH, hî'ê-rô-glîf. }
HIEROGLY'PHICK, hî-ê-rô-glîf'îk. }
n. s. [hieroglyphe, French; ἱερὸς, sacred, and γλύφω, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire. Brown.
A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life. Wilkins.
The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick. Woodward.
Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

HIEROGLY'PHICAL, hî-ê-rô-glîf'ê-kâl. }
HIEROGLY'PHICK, hî-ê-rô-glîf'îk. }
adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble. Sandys.
Th' Egyptian serpent figures time,
And stripp'd, returns into his prime;
If my affection thou would'st win,
First cast thy hieroglyphick skin. Cleaveland.
The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality. Brown.

HIEROGLY'PHICALLY, hî-ê-rô-glîf'ê-kâl-ê. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as the Egyptians, and the phœnix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown.

HIERO'GRAPHY, hî-ê-rôg'grâf-ê.[518] n. s. [ἱερὸς and γράφω.] Holy writing.

HIE'ROPHANT, hî-êr'ô-fânt.[518] n. s. [ἱεροφάντης.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people. Hale.

To HI'GGLE, hĭg'gl.[405] v. n. [of uncertain etymology, probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends. Hale.

Base thou art!
To higgle thus for a few blows,
To gain thy knight an op'lent spouse. Hudibras.

Why all this higgling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull? Arbuthnot.

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY, hĭg'gl-dē-pĭg'gl-dē. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HI'GGLER, hĭg'gl-ûr.[98] n. s. [from higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH, hī.[390] adj. [heah, Saxon; hoogh, Dutch.]

1. Long upward; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep, or long downward.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved. Bacon.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality. Burnet's Theory.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakspeare's Richard III.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast. Dryden.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabrick; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being. Locke.

3. Exalted in nature.

The highest faculty of the soul. Baxter.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.

He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor. Shaksp.

O mortals! blind in fate, who never know
To bear high fortune, or endure the low. Dryden.

5. Exalted in sentiment.

Solomon liv'd at ease, nor aim'd beyond
Higher design than to enjoy his state. Milton.

6. Difficult; abstruse.

They meet to hear, and answer such high things. Shaksp.

7. Boastful; ostentatious.

His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot. Clarendon.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty.

The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter. Clarendon.

9. Severe; oppressive.

When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen. Bacon.

10. Noble; illustrious.

Trust me, I am exceeding weary.
——I had thought weariness durst not have attacked so high blood—It doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Shakspeare.

11. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.

More ships in calms on a deceitful coast,
Or unseen rocks, than in high storms are lost. Denham.

Spiders cannot weave their nets in a high wind. Duppa.

At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;
Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury. Addison.

12. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.

Not only tears
Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within,
Began to rise; high passions, anger,
Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, shook sore
Their inward state of mind. Milton.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

13. Full; complete: applied to time; now used only in cursory speech.

High time now 'gan it wax for Una fair,
To think of those her captive parents dear. F. Q.

Sweet warriour, when shall I have peace with you?
High time it is this war now ended were. Spenser.

It was high time to do so, for it was now certain that forces were already upon their march towards the west. Clarendon.

They are forced to take their course either high to the north, or low to the south. Abbot.

16. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as, by the sun it is high noon: whence probably the foregoing expression, high time.

It is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered. Genesis.

17. Far advanced into antiquity.

The nominal observation of the several days of the week is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who named the same according to the seven planets. Brown.

18. Dear; exorbitant in price.

If they must be good at so high a rate, they know they may be safe at a cheaper. South.

19. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.

HIGH, hī. n. s. High place; elevation; superiour region: only used with from and on.

Which when the king of gods beheld from high,
He sigh'd. Dryden.

On HIGH, adv. Aloft; above; into superiour regions.

Wide is the fronting gate, and raised on high
With adamantine columns threats the sky. Dryden.

HIGH is much used in composition with variety of meaning.

HIGH-BLE'ST, hī'blĕst. adj. Supremely happy.

The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends,
But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n,
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem. Milton.

HI'GH-BLOWN, hī'blōne. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers on a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me, and now has left me,
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me. Shakspeare.

HI'GH-BORN, hī'bōrn. Of noble extraction.

Cast round your eyes
Upon the high-born beauties of the court;
There chuse some worthy partner of your heart. Rowe.

HI'GH-BUILT, hī'bĭlt. adj.

1. Of lofty structure.

I know him by his stride,
The giant Harapha of Gath; his look
Haughty as is his pile, high-built and proud. Milt.

2. Covered with lofty buildings.

In dreadful wars
The high-built elephant his castle rears,
Looks down on man below, and strikes the stars. Creech.

HIGH-CO'LOURED, hī'kŭl-lûr'd. Having a deep or glaring colour.

HIGHWA'Y, hi-wâ' n. s. [high and way.]

1. Great road; public path.

So few there be
That chuse the narrow path, or seek the right;
All keep the broad highway, and take delight
With many rather for to go astray. Fairy Queen.

Two inscriptions give a great light to the histories of Appius, who made the highway, and of Fabius the dictator. Addison.

Ent'ring on the broad highway,
Where power and titles scatter'd lay,
He strove to pick up all he found. Swift.

2. Figuratively a train of action, with apparent consequence.

I could mention more trades we have lost, and are in the highway to lose. Child on Trade.

HI'GHWAYMAN, hi'wā-măn.[88] n. s. [highway and man.] A robber that plunders on the public roads.

'Tis like the friendship of pickpockets and highwaymen, that observe strict justice among themselves. Bentley.

A remedy like that of giving my money to an highwayman, before he attempts to take it by force, to prevent the sin of robbery. Swift.

HI'GLAPER, hĭg'lā-pŭr. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

HILA'RITY, hĭl-lăr'ĕ-tē. n. s. [hilaritas, Latin.] Merriment; gayety.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence for wine. Brown.

HILD, hĭld, in Elrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: so Hildebert is a noble lord; Mathild, an heroick lady. Gibson.

HI'LDING, hĭl'dĭng. n. s. [hilb, Saxon signifies a lord: perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hinderling, degenerate. Hughes' Spenser.]

1. A sorry, paltry, cowardly fellow.

He was some hilding fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on. Shakspeare.

If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect. Shakspeare.

A base slave,
A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth. Shaksp.

2. It is used likewise for a mean woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shaksp.

This idle toy, this hilding scorns my power,
And sets us all at nought. Rowe.

HILL, hĭl. n. s. [hil, Saxon.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.

My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;
Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love. Sidney.

Jerusalem is seated on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned side to side. Fairfax.

Three sides are sure imbar'd with crags and hills,
The rest is easy, scant to rise espy'd;
But mighty bulwarks fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art. Fairfax.

When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill, looks round to view. Granv.

A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral which, by a plastick virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow. Cheyne.

HI'LLOCK, hĭl'lŏk. n. s. [from hill.] A little hill.

Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:
What, judge ye, doth a hillock show by the lofty Olympus. Sidney.

Sometime walking not unseen,
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.

This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions. Addison.

HI'LLY, hĭl'lē. adj. [from hill.] Full of hills; unequal in the surface.

Towards the hilly corners of Druina remain yet her very aborigines, thrust amongst an assembly of mountains. Howel.

Climbing to a hilly steep,
He views his herds in vales afar. Dryden.

Lo! how the Norrick plains
Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughter'd knights. Philips.

Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chuse to travel through a plain one. Addison.

HILT, hĭlt. n. s. [hilt, Saxon, from healdan, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets. Shaks.

Take thou the hilt,
And when my face is cover'd as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. Shaksp.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze. Pope.

HIM, hĭm. [him, Saxon.]

1. The oblique case of he.

Me he restored unto my office, and him he hanged. Genesis.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

The subjunctive mood hath evermore some conjunction joined with him. Accidence.

HI'MSELF, him-sĕlf'. pron. [him and self.]

1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical, and more expressive of individual personality.

It was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself. Bacon.

With shame remembers, while himself was one Of the same herd, himself the same had done. Denham.

2. It is added to a personal pronoun or noun, by way of emphatical discrimination.

He himself returned again. Judges.
God himself is with us for our captain. Chron.

3. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is advanc'd
Above the clouds as high as heav'n himself. Shaks.

4. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.

David hid himself in the field. Samuel.

5. It is sometimes not reciprocal.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit set a work by a reproveable badness in himself. Shakspeare.

Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy. South.

By HIMSELF. Alone; unaccompanied.

Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself. Kings.

HIN, hin. n. s. [הין] A measure of liquids among the Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil. Exodus.

HIND, hind. adj. compar. hinder; superl. hindmost. [hýndan, Saxon.] Backward; contrary in position to the face: as, hind legs. See HINDER and HINDMOST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball. Ray.

The stag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope.

HIND, hind. n. s. [hinde, Saxon, from hinnus, Latin.]

1. The she to a stag; the female of red deer.

How he slew, with glancing dart amiss,
A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life. Fairy Queen.

Canst thou mark when the hinds do calve? Job.

Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,
Not though the brazen-footed hind he slew. Dryd.

2. [hine, Saxon.] A servant.

A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet-lane. Shakspeare.

3. [hineman, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustick.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,
To reap the harvest their ripe years did yield,
Now look like those, when rolling thunders roar,
And sheets of lightning blast the standing field. Dryden.

He cloath'd himself in coarse array,
A lab'ring hind in shew. Dryden's Fables.

HINDBE'RRIES, hind'bĕr-rĭz. n. s. The same as raspberries. Ainsworth.

To HI'NDER, hĭn'dûr. v. a. [hindrian, Saxon.] To obstruct; to stop; to let; to impede.

Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way. Genesis.

The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labour. Wisdom.

If the alms were hindered only by entreaty, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because entreaty took not liberty away from the giver. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Solitude damps thought and wit; too much company dissipates and hinders it from fixing. Temple.

What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right. Locke.

To HI'NDER, hĭn'dûr. v. n. To raise hinderances; to cause impediment.

You minimus of hindering knot-grass made! Shakspeare.

This objection hinders not but that the heroick action of some commander, enterprised for the christian cause, and executed happily, may be written. Dryden.

HI'NDER, hĭn'dûr.[515] adj. [from hind.] That is in a position contrary to that of the face: opposed to fore.

Bears, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet; and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement. Sidney.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back. Addison.

HI'NDERANCE, hĭn'dûr-ânse. n. s. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction: with of, sometimes with to, before the thing hindered; with to before the person.

False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions, more pernicious than the first: yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first. Hooker.

They must be in every christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance. Hooker.

What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done? Dryden.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hinderance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hinderances out of the way that leads to justice. Atterbury.

HI'NDERER, hĭn'dûr-ûr. n. s. [from hinder.] He or that which hinders or obstructs.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow. May.

HI'NDERLING, hind'ûr-lĭng. n. s. [from hind or hinder.] A paltry, worthless, degenerate animal.

HI'NDERMOST, hind'ûr-mōst. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost. Genesis.

Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by,
And leave you hindermost. Shakspeare.

HI'NDMOST, hind'mōst. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the lag; that comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now. Shakspeare's Henry VI

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind. Deuter.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last,
A losing gamester. Dryden.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmost, hell—he said, and run. Pope.

HINGE, hĭnje.[74] n. s. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

At the gate
Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning. Milton.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force. Denham.

Heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd. Dryden.

2. The cardinal points of the world, east, west, north, and south.

If when the moon is in the hinge at east,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives. Creech's Manilius.

3. A governing rule or principle.

The other hinge of punishment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, should pay the third part of their revenue. Temple.

4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a state of irregularity and disorder.

The man's spirit is out of order, and off the hinges; and till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually disquieted. Tillotson.

Methinks we stand on ruins, nature shakes
About us, and this universal frame
So loose, that it but wants another push
To leap from off its hinges. Dryden.

To HINGE, hĭnje. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with hinges.

2. To bend as a hinge.

Be thou a flatterer now, and hinge the knee,
And let his very breath, whom thou 'lt observe,
Blow off thy cap. Shaksp.

To HINT, hĭnt. v. a. [enter, Fr. Skinner.] To bring to mind by a slight mention, or remote allusion; to mention imperfectly.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike. Pope.

In waking whispers, and repeated dreams,
To hint pure thought, and warn the favour'd soul. Thomson.

To HINT at, hĭnt. To allude to; to touch slightly upon.

Speaking of Augustus's actions, he still remembers that agriculture ought to be some way hinted at throughout the whole poem. Addison.

HINT, hĭnt. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint notice given to the mind; remote allusion; distant insinuation.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart. South.

2. Suggestion; intimation.

On this hint I spake,
She lov'd me for the dangers I had past. Shaksp.

Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them. Addison.

HIP, hĭp. n. s. [from heopa, Sax.] The fruit of the brier or the dogrose.

Eating hips, and drinking watry foam. Hubberd.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;
The oak bears masts, the briars scarlet hips. Shak.

Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold winters. Bacon.

HIP, hip. n. s. [hỳpe, Saxon.]

1. The joint of the thigh.

How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shaksp.

Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally molested with the sciatica or hip gout. Brown.

2. The haunch; the flesh of the thigh.

So shepherds use
To set the same mark on the hip
Both of their sound and rotten sheep. Hudibras.

Against a stump his tusks the monster grinds,
And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound. Dryden.

3. To have on the HIP. [A low phrase.] To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.

If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish
For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip. Shaksp.

To HIP, hip. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sprain or shoot the hip.

His horse was hipp'd. Shaksp.

2. HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

Your different tastes divide our poet's cares;
One foot the sock, t' other the buskin wears:
Thus while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do 't,
Like Volscius hip-hop in a single boot. Congreve.

HIP, hip. interject. An exclamation, or calling to one; the same as the Latin eho, heus! Ainsworth.

HIP, hip. } adj. A corruption of HI'PPISH, hip'pish. } hypochondriack. Ainsworth.

HIPPOCE'NTAUR, hip'pŏ-sĕn'tâwr. n. s. [ἱπποκένταυρος; hippocentaure, Fr.] A fabulous monster, half horse and half man.

How are poetical fictions, how are hippocentaurs and chimeras to be imagined, which are things quite out of nature, and whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

HI'PPOCRASS, hip'pŏ-krâs. n. s. [hypocras, Fr. quasi vinum Hippocratis.] A medicated wine.

Sack and the well-spic'd hippocrass, the wine,
Wassail the bowl, with ancient ribbands fine. King.

HI'PPOCRATES' Sleeve, hip'pŏ-krà-tĕz-slēēve'. n. s. A woollen bag, made by joining the two opposite angles of a square piece of flannel, used to strain syrups and decoctions for clarification. Quincy.

HI'PPOGRIFF, hip'pŏ-grif. n. s. [ἱππος and γρυψ; hippogriffe, Fr.] A winged horse; a being imagined by Ariosto.

He caught him up, and without wing
Of hippogriff, bore through the air sublime. Milton.

HIPPO'POTAMUS, hip-pŏ-pŏt'â-mŭs. n. s. [ἱππος and ποταμος.] The river horse. An animal found in the Nile.

HI'PSHOT, hip'shŏt. n. s. [hip and shot.] Sprained or dislocated in the hip.

Why do you go nodding and waggling so like a fool, as if you were hipshot; says the goose to the gosling. L'Estrange.

HI'PWORT, hip'wûrt. n. s. [hip and wort.] A plant. Ainsworth.

To HIRE, hire. v. a. [hỳran, Sax.]

1. To procure any thing for temporary use at a certain price.

His sordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the jakes. Dryden.

2. To engage a man in temporary service for wages.

They weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god. Isaiah.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves. Shaksp.

3. To bribe.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,
Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,
Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryden.

4. To engage for pay: with the reciprocal word.

They that were full, hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceased. 1 Sam.

5. To let; to set for a time at a certain price. This, to prevent ambiguity, has sometimes the particle out: as, he hired out his house to strangers.

HIRE, hire. n. s. [hỳre, Saxon.]

1. Reward or recompense paid for the use of any thing.

2. Wages paid for service.

Great thanks and goodly meed to that good sire;
He thence departing gave for his pains hire. Spenser.

I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father. Shaksp.

Though little was their hire, and light their gain,
Yet somewhat to their share he threw. Dryden.

All arts and artists Theseus could command,
Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame. Dryden.

HI'RELING, hire'lĭng. n. s. [from hire.]

1. One who serves for wages.

The hireling longs to see the shades descend,
That with the tedious day his toil might end,
And he his pay receive. Sandys.

In the framing of Hiero's ship there was three hundred carpenters employed for a year, besides many other hirelings for carriages. Wilkins.

'Tis frequent here to see a freeborn son
On the left hand of a rich hireling run. Dryden.

2. A mercenary; a prostitute.

Now she shades thy evening walk with bays,
No hireling she, no prostitute to praise. Pope.

HI'RELING, hire'lĭng. adj. Serving for hire; venal; mercenary; doing what is done for money.

Then trumpets, torches, and a tedious crew
Of hireling mourners for his funeral due. Dryden.

HI'RER, hire'rûr.[98] n. s. [from hire.]

1. One who uses any thing paying a recompense; one who employs others paying wages.

2. In Scotland it denotes one who keeps small horses to let.

HIRSU'TE, hĕr-sūte'. adj. [hirsutus, Lat.] Rough; rugged.

There are bulbous, fibrous, and hirsute roots: the hirsute is a middle sort, between the bulbous and fibrous; that, besides the putting forth sap upwards and downwards, putteth forth in round. Bacon.

HIS, hĭz. pronoun possessive. [hỳr, Sax.]

1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulph. Shaksp.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion. Shaksp.

Heav'n and yourself
Had part in this fair maid; now heav'n hath all,
And all the better is it for the maid:
Your part in her you could not keep from death;
But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life. Shaksp.

If our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us. Shaksp.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself: nobody can deny but the nourishment is his. Locke.

Whene'er I stoop, he offers at a kiss;
And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his. Addison.

2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say its.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shaksp.

Not the dreadful spout,
Shall dizy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent. Shaksp.

There 's not the smallest orb, which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shaksp.

This rule is not so general, but that it admitteth his exceptions. Carew.

Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as, the man his ground, for the man's ground. It is now rarely thus used, as its use proceeded probably from a false opinion that the s formative of the genitive case was his contracted.

Where is this mankind now? who lives to age
Fit to be made Methusalem his page? Donne.

By thy fond consort, by thy father's cares,
By young Telemachus his blooming years. Pope.

4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shaksp.

5. Anciently before self.

Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

To HISS, hĭss. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames and cooled glowing hot, in that surge, like a horseshoe; think of that; hissing hot. Shaksp.

The merchants shall hiss at thee. Ezekiel.

See the furies arise:
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair. Dryden.

Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which hissing as it flew,
Pierced through the yielding planks. Dryden.

2. To condemn at a publick exhibition; which is sometimes done by hissing.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace!
Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chace. Sandys.

To HISS, hĭss. v. a. [hỳscean, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.

Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace. Ecclus.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. More.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous? Collier.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I
Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave. Shaksp.

What's the newest grief?
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker,
Each minute teems a new one. Shaksp.

Hiss, hĭss. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

He hiss for hiss return'd, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard
On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of publick scorn! Milton.

Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears,
Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope.

Hist, hĭst. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: some thought it a corruption of hush, hush it, husht, hist; but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence.] An exclamation commanding silence.

Mute silence hist along!
'Less Philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton.

Hist, hist, says another that stood by, away, doctor; for here's a whole pack of dismals coming. Swift.

Histo'rian, hĭs-tō'rē-ăn. n. s. [historicus, Lat. historien, Fr.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee, divine
Historian! Milton.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison.

Not added years on years my task could close,
The long historian of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTO'RICAL, hĭs-tŏr'ĭk-ăl. } adj. [his-
HISTO'RICK, hĭs-tŏr'rĭk.[509] } torique, Fr. historicus, Lat.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet.

Here rising bold the patriot's honest face;
There warriors frowning in historick brass. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

Histo'rically, hĭs-tŏr'rĭk-ăl-ē. adv. [from historical.] In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope.

To Histo'rify, hĭs-tŏr'ē-fī. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify
Her praise, whose praise, to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney.

The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed. Brown.

Historio'grapher, hĭs-tō-rē-ŏg'rā-fŭr. n. s. [ἱστορια and γραφω; historiographe, Fr.] A historian; a writer of history.

The method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of persons famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers. Addison.

I put the journals into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs. Arbuthnot.

Historio'graphy, hĭs-tō-rē-ŏg'rā-fē.[518] n. s. [ιστορια and γραφω.] The art or employment of a historian.

HI'STORY, hĭs'tŭr-ē.[557] n. s. [ιστορια; historia, Latin; histoire, French.]

1. A narration of events and facts delivered with dignity.

Justly Cæsar scorns the poet's lays;
It is to history he trusts for praise. Pope.

2. Narration; relation.

The history part lay within a little room. Wiseman.

What histories of toils could I declare?
But still long-weary'd nature wants repair. Pope.

3. The knowledge of facts and events.

History, so far as it relates to the affairs of the bible, is necessary to divines. Watts.

History Piece, hĭs'tŭr-ē-pēēse. n. s. A picture representing some memorable event.

His works resemble a large history piece, where even the less important figures have some convenient place. Pope.

HISTRIO'NICAL, hĭs-trē-ŏn'ē-kăl. } adj. [from histrio, Latin; histrion, Fr.]
HISTRIO'NICK, hĭs-trē-ŏn'ĭk.[509] } Befitting the stage; suitable to a player; becoming a buffoon; theatrical.

Histrio'nically, hĭs-trē-ŏn'ē-kăl-ē. adv. [from histrionical.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

To Hit, hĭt. v. a. [from ictus, Latin, Minshew; from hitte, Danish, to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken; and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. South.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?
Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?
If he be blind, how hitteth he so right? Sidney.

So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. South.

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail: used of tentative experiments.

Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him. Shaksp.

Search every comment that your care can find,
Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind. Roscommon

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns. Locke.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features. Atterbury.

4. To suit; to be conformable to.

Hail, divinest melancholy!
Whose saintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight. Milton.

5. To strike; to catch by the right bait; to touch properly.

There you hit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly: that argument never fails with him. Dryden.

6. To Hit off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.

7. To Hit out. To perform by good luck.

Having the sound of ancient poets ringing in his ears, he mought needs in singing hit out some of their tunes. Spenser.

To Hit, hĭt. v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another? or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension? Locke.

Bones, teeth, and shells, being sustained in the water with metallick corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident: not to miss.

Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest and despair most fits. Shak.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part. Bacon

But thou bring'st valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to hit. Hudibras.

This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible. Dryden.

All human race would fain be wits,
And millions miss for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon.

You 've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it. Tillotson.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon 't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estrange.

None of them hit upon the art. Addison.

There 's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

Hit, hĭt. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shaksp.

So he the fam'd Cilician fencer prais'd,
And at each hit with wonder seem amaz'd. Dryden.

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Granville.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment but a lucky hit. South.

But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estrange.

If casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?
Blackmore.

3. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shaksp.

These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking. Dryden.

If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champaigne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lasses. Prior.

To HITCH, hĭtsh. v. n. [hiegan, Saxon, or hocher, French, Skinner.] To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage: nor here know well what it means.

Whoe'er offends at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope.

To HI'TCHEL, hĭtsh'îl. v. a. [See HATCHEL.] To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HI'TCHEL, hĭtsh'îl. n. s. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

HITHE, hĭthe. n. s. [hýðe, Sax.] A small haven to land wares out of vessels or boats: as Queenhithe, and Lambhithe, now Lambeth.

HI'THER, hĭth'ûr.[98] adv. [hiðep, Sax.]

1. To this place from some other.

Cæsar, tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion! hither came. Spenser.

Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither.
Shaksp.

Who brought me hither
Will bring me hence, no other guide I seek. Milton.

2. It is used in opposition; hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this topick of argument: [huc, Latin. Huc refer exitum.] Not much used.

Hereupon dependeth whatsoever difference there is between the states of saints in glory; hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God. Hooker.

Hither belong all those texts, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Tillotson.

HI'THER, hĭth'ûr. adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; towards this part.

After these,
But on the hither side, a different sort,
From the high neighb'ring hills descended. Milton.

An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end, namely that extreme wherein it is finite. Hale.

HI'THERMOST, hĭth'ûr-mŏst. adj. [of hither, adv.] Nearest on this side.

That which is external can be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost extreme. Hale.

HI'THERTO, hĭth'ûr-tôô. adv. [from hither.]

1. To this time; yet.

Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem. Dryden.

2. In any time till now.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whiles the famous ancestries
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. F. Queen.

3. At every time till now.

In this we are not their adversaries, tho' they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hooker.

Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milton.

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd
And with those graces ev'ry day beheld
The graceful youth. Dryden.

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryden.

To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift.

HI'THERWARD, hĭth'ûr-wârd. } adv.
HI'THERWARDS, hĭth'ûr-wârdz. } [hýðeppeapð, Sax.] This way; towards this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shaksp.

The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily. Shaksp.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton.

HIVE, hive. n. s. [hýpe, Sax.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shak.

So wand'ring bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the hive. Waller.

Bees have each of them a hole in their hives; their honey is their own, and every bee minds her own concerns. Addison.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down. Shak.

3. A company being together.

What modern masons call a lodge, was by antiquity called a hive of free masons; and therefore, when a dissention happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift.

To HIVE, hive. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving. Dryden.

When bees are fully settled, and the cluster at the biggest, hive them. Mortimer.

2. To contain, as in hives; to receive, as to a habitation.

Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise,
He at Fuscara's sleeve arriv'd,
Where all delicious sweets are hiv'd. Cleaveland.

To HIVE, hive. v. n. To take shelter together; to reside collectively.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shaksp.

In summer we wander in a paradisaical scene, among groves and gardens; but at this season we get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities. Pope's Letters.

HI'VER, hive'ûr.[98] n. s. [from hive.] One who puts bees in hives.

Let the hiver drink a cup of good beer, and wash his hands and face therewith. Mortimer.

HO, HOA, } hô. } interj. [eho! Latin.] A call; a sudden exclamation to give notice of approach, or any thing else.

What noise there, ho? Shaksp.

Here dwells my father Jew: hoa, who 's within? Shaksp.

Stand, ho! speak the word along. Shaksp.

When I cried hoa!
Like boys, kings would start forth, and cry,
Your will. Shaksp.

Ho, ho, come forth and flee. Zachariah.

Ho, swain, what shepherd owns that ragged sheep? Dryden.

HOAR, hôre. adj. [hap, Saxon.]

1. White.

A people,
Whom Ireland sent from loughs and forests hore.
Fairfax.

Islands of bliss, all assaults
Baffling, like thy hoar cliffs the loud sea wave.
Thomson.

2. Gray with age.

It govern'd was, and guided evermore
Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar.
Spenser.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng;
Youth and hoar age, and man drives man along.
Pope.

3. White with frost.

HOAR-FROST, hôre'frôst. n. s. [hoar and frost.] The congellations of dew in frosty mornings on the grass.

When the dew was gone up, behold upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar-frost on the ground. Exodus.

In Farenheit's thermometer, at thirty-two degrees, the water in the air begins to freeze, which is known by hoar-frosts. Arbuthnot.

HOARD, hôrde. n. s. [hopð, Saxon.] A store laid up in secret; a hidden stock; a treasure.

I have a venturous fairy, that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee thence new nuts. Shaksp.

They might have even starved, had it not been for this providential reserve, this hoard, that was stowed in the strata underneath, and now seasonably disclosed. Woodward.

To HOARD, hôrde. v. n. To make hoards; to lay up store.

He fear'd not once himself to be in need,
Nor car'd to hoard for those whom he did breed.
Spenser.

Happy was it always for that son,
Whose father for his hoarding went to hell? Shaksp.

To HOARD, hôrde. v. a.

1. To lay in hoards; to husband privily; to store secretly.

The hoarded plague of the gods requite your love?
Shaksp.

You hoard not health for your own private use,
But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryd.

You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money; but you may safely relate that he hoards it. Arbuthnot.

A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is hoarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years. Rogers.

2. It is sometimes enforced by the particle up.

I have just occasion to complain of them, who, because they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it. Dryden.

The base wretch who hoards up all he can,
Is prais'd and call'd a careful thrifty man. Dryden.

Ho'arder, hôrd'ûr.[98] n. s. [from hoard.] One that stores up in secret.

Since commodities will be raised, this alteration will be an advantage to nobody but hoarders of money. Locke.

Ho'arhound, hôre'hôûnd. n. s. [marrubium, Lat.] A plant.

Hoarhound has its leaves and flower-cup covered very thick with a white hoariness: it is famous for the relief it gives in moist asthmas, of which a thick and viscous matter is the cause; but it is now little used. Hill.

Ho'ariness, hô'rê-nês. n. s. [from hoary.] The state of being whitish; the colour of old men's hair.

He grows a wolf, his hoariness remains,
And the same rage in other members reigns. Dryd.

HOARSE, hôrse. adj. [haꝛ, Sax. heersch, Dutch.] Having the voice rough, as with a cold; having a rough sound.

Come, sit, sit, and a song.
——Clap into 't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse. Shaksp.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shaksp.

He sped his steps along the hoarse resounding shore. Dryden.

The stock-dove only through the forest cooes,
Mournfully hoarse. Thomson.

Ho'arsely, hôrse'lê. adv. [from hoarse.] With a rough harsh voice.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryd.

Ho'arseness, hôrse'nês. n. s. [from hoarse.] Roughness of voice.

The voice is sometimes intercluded by an hoarseness, or viscous phlegm. Holder.

I had a voice in heav'n, ere sulph'rous steams
Had damp'd it to a hoarseness. Dryden.

The want of it in the windpipe occasions hoarseness in the gullet, and difficulty of swallowing. Arbuthnot.

HO'ARY, hô'rê. adj. [haꝛ, haꝛunꝺ, Sax. See Hoar.]

1. White; whitish.

Thus she rested on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind. Addison.

2. White or gray with age.

A comely palmer, clad in black attire,
Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary grey. Spenser.

Solyman, marvelling at the courage and majesty of the hoary old prince in his so great extremity, dismissed him, and sent him again into the city. Knolles.

Has then my hoary head deserv'd no better? Rowe.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great preacher, to thy promis'd bliss. Prior.

3. White with frost.

The seasons alter; hoary headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose. Shaksp.

4. Mouldy; mossy; rusty.

There was brought out of the city into the camp very coarse, hoary, moulded bread. Knolles.

To HO'BBLE, hôb'bl.[405] v. n. [to hopi, to hopple, to hobble.]

1. To walk lamely or awkwardly upon one leg more than the other; to hitch; to walk with unequal and encumbered steps.

The friar was hobbling the same way too. Dryd.

Some persons continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through. Addison.

Was he ever able to walk without leading-strings, without being discovered by his hobbling? Swift.

2. To move roughly or unevenly. Feet being ascribed to verses, whatever is done with feet is likewise ascribed to them.

Those ancient Romans had a sort of extempore poetry, or untuneable hobbling verse. Dryden.

While you Pindarick truths rehearse;
She hobbles in alternate verse. Prior.

Ho'bble, hôb'bl. n. s. [from the verb.] Uneven awkward gait.

One of his heels is higher than the other, which gives him a hobble in his gait. Gulliver.

Ho'bbler, hôb'bl-ûr. n. s. [from hobby.]

For twenty hobblers armed, Irishmen so called, because they served on hobbies, he paid sixpence a-piece per diem. Davies.

Ho'bby, hôb'bê. n. s. [hobereau, Fr.]

1. A species of hawk.

They have such a hovering possession of the Valtoline, as an hobby hath over a lark. Bacon.

The people will chop like trouts at an artificial fly, and dare like larks under the awe of a painted hobby. L'Estrange.

Larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryd.

2. [hoppe, Gothick, a horse; hobin, Fr. a pacing horse.] An Irish or Scotish horse; a pacing horse; a garran. See Hobbler.

3. A stick on which boys get astride and ride.

Those grave contenders about opinionative trifles look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby horse. Glanville.

As young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer;
But leap pro libitu, and scout
On horse call'd hobby, or without. Prior.

No hobby horse, with gorgeous top,
Could with this rod of Sid compare. Swift.

4. A stupid fellow.

I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby horses must not hear. Shaksp.

Hobgo'blin, hôb-gôb'lîn. n. s. [according to Skinner for robgoblins, from Robin Goodfellow, Hob being the nickname of Robin: but more probably, according to Wallis and Junius, hopgoblins empusæ, because they do not move their feet: whence, says Wallis, came the boys' play of fox in the hole, the fox always hopping on one leg.] A frightful fairy.

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality:
Crier hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes. Shaksp.

Ho'bit, hô'bit. n. s. A small mortar to shoot little bombs.

Ho'bnail, hôb'nâle. n. s. [from hobby and nail.] A nail used in shoeing a hobby or little horse; a nail with a thick strong head.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, I beseech Jove on my knees thou may'st be turn'd into hobnails. Shak.

We may buy maidenheads as they buy hobnails, by the hundred. Shakspeare.

Ho'bnailed, hôb'nâl'd. adj. [from hobnail.] Set with hobnails.

Would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,
Would'st thou, to run the gantlet, these expose
To a whole company of hobnail'd shoes? Dryden.

Ho'bnob, hôb'nôb. This is probably corrupted from habnab by a coarse pronunciation. See Habnab.

His incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none, but pangs of death and sepulchre: hobnob is his word; give 't, or take 't. Shakspeare.

Hock, hôk. n. s. [the same with hough.] The joint between the knee and the fetlock.

To Hock, hôk. v. a. [from the noun.] To disable in the hock.

Hock, hôk. } Ho'ckamore, hôk'â-môre. } n. s. [from Hockheim on the Maine.] Old strong Rhenish.

Restor'd the fainting high and mighty;
With brandy, wine, and aqua vitæ;
And made 'em stoutly overcome
With bachrach, hockamore and mum. Hudibras.

Wine becomes sharp, as hock, like vitriolick acidity. Floyer.

If cyder-royal should become unpleasant, and as unfit to bottle as old hockamore, mix one hogshead of that and one of tart new cyder together. Mortimer.

This once happy land,
By homebred fury rent, long groan'd. Philips.

HO'MEFELT, hŏme'fêlt. adj. [home and felt.] Inward; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard till now. Milton

Happy next him who to these shades retires,
Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires.

Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease. Pope.

HO'MELILY, hôme'lè-lé. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly.

HO'MELINESS, hôme'lè-nés. n. s. [from homely.] Plainness; rudeness; coarseness.

Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.

My affairs
Do even drag me homeward. Shaksp.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

Look homeward, angel, now, and melt with ruth;
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth! Milt.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
While homeward from their wat'ry pastures borne,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return. Dryd.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence?
Dryden.

HO'MICIDE, hôm'ê-side. n. s. [homicide, Fr. homicidium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood: construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker.

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is 't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.

3. [homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A murderer; a man-slayer.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.
——If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shaksp.

Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conq'ring arms, with corps to strew the field. Dryden.

HOMICI'DAL, hôm-ê-sî'dâl. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.

There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honestly, would rather perish basely. B. Jons.

For some time past all proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.

2. With chastity; modestly.

Ho'NESTY, ôn'nês-tê. n. s. [honnesté, Fr. honestas, Lat.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands,
——Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower. Shaksp.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty, in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.

HO'NEY, hůn'nê.[166] n. s. [hunig, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honec, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Hill.

Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach, through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb, is destined for the young offspring: but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves. Hill.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shaksp.

Touching his education and first fostering, some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there 's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot. L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sope, resolvent of the bile, balsamick, and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbuthnot.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shaksp.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shaksp.

3. Sweet; sweetness: a name of tenderness. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion, and I dote. Shaksp.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee. Dryden.

To Ho'NEY, hůn'nê. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty. Shakspeare.

Ho'NEY-BAG, hůn'nê-bâg. n. s. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which bees always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter. Grew.

Ho'NEY-COMB, hůn'nê-kôme. n. s. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

Ho'NEY-COMBED, hůn'nê-kôm'd. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wiseman.

Ho'NEY-DEW, hůn'nê-dů. n. s. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

Ho'NEY-FLOWER, hůn'nê-flôů-ůr. n. s. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

Ho'NEY-GNAT, hůn'nê-nât. n. s. [meltio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect. Ains.

Ho'NEY-MOON, hůn'nê-môôn. n. s. [honey and moon.] The first month after marriage when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey moon is over. Addison.

Ho'NEY-SUCKLE, hůn'nê-sůk-kl. n. s. [caprifolium, Lat.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shaksp.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then melfoil beat and honey-suckles pound;
With these alluring favours strew the ground. Dry.

Ho'NEY-WORT, hůn'nê-wůrt. n. s. [cerinthe, Lat.] A plant.

Ho'NEYLESS, hůn'nê-lês. adj. [from honey.] Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless. Shaksp.

Ho'NIED, hůn'nid.[283] adj. [from honey.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing. Milton

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder worketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shaksp.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton.

Ho'NORARY, ôn'nůr-â-rê.[557] adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison.

This monument is only honorary, for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with little honorary rewards, that without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HO'NOUR, ôn'nůr.[394] n. s. [honeur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not used.

Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the separated councils:
His honour and myself are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Catesby. Shak.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours
Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shaksp.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may
Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shaksp.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shaks.

His grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants.
——Ha! 'tis he indeed!
Is this the honour they do one another? Shaksp.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour flaw'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they 'll pay for it. Shaksp.

She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shaks.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect; with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnet.

10. Public mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their fun'ral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wake's Prep. for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shaksp.

Honours were conferred upon Antonine by Hadrian in his infancy. Wotton.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will, a lord,
To do the honours and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The sire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryd.

14. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shaksp.

To Ho'nour, ôn'nûr.[314] v. a. [honorer, French; honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Esther.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Ecclus.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches. Ecclus.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shaksp.

3. To glorify.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Exodus.

Ho'nourable, ôn'nûr-â-bl. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth. Isaiah.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charged in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shaksp.

3. Conferring honour.

Think'st thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Shaksp.

Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryd.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Spenser.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here 's a Bohemian Tartar tarries the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shakspeare.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppe for an haven. 1 Mac.

Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shakspeare.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it. Hayward.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow. Shakspeare.

8. Equitable.

Ho'nourableness, ôn'nûr-â-bl-nês. n. s. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity.

Ho'nourably, ôn'nûr-â-blé. adv. [from honourable.]

1. With tokens of honour.

The rev'rend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably received him. Shaksp.

2. Magnanimously; generously.

After some six weeks, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason and condemned. Bacon.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:
Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryd.

Ho'nourer, ôn'nûr-rûr.[98] n. s. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

Hood, hûd,[307] in composition, is derived from the Saxon had, in German heit, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

Hood, hûd. n. s. [hod, Saxon, probably from heapod, head.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd:
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryd.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him. Wotton.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress; it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it. Arbuthnot.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

To Hood, hûd. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

The cobler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, Amen. Shak.

3. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above;
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.

Ho'odman Blind, hûd-mân-blind'. n. s. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was 't,
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shak.

To Ho'odwink, hûd'wink. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hood-winking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries Shaksp.

Then she who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,
Doth first herself within death's mirrour see. Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one lost,
And, hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a post. Ben Jonson.

Satan is fain to hood-wink those that start Decay of Piety.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?
Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance! Rowe.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort,
The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Garth.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient; for the prize I'll bring thee to,
Shall hood-wink this mischance. Shaksp.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all men's ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hood-wink'd with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him. Sidney.

Hoof, hôôf.[306] n. s. [hop, Saxon; hoef, Dutch.] The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets. Ezekiel.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs. More.

Hoof-bound, hôôf'bôûnd. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore-feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, insomuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Far. Dict.

Ho'ofed, hôôfd. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest. Grew.

Hook, hôôk.[306] n. s. [hoce, Saxon; hoeck, Dutch.]

1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot hooks.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they essayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have it pulled down. Knolles.

2. The curvated wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks,
That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spens.
My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakspeare.
Though divine Plato thus of pleasure thought,
They us with hooks and baits, like fishes caught.
Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving,
Fairness, which strikes the eye. Shakspeare

4. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.

About the caldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and ladles, as need did require;
The while the viands in the vessel boil'd. F. Queen.

5. A sickle to reap corn.

Pease are commonly reaped with a hook at the end of a long stick. Mortimer.

6. Any instrument to cut or lop with.

Not that I 'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook. Pope.

7. The part of the hinge fixed to the post: whence the proverb, off the hooks, for in disorder.

My doublet looks,
Like him that wears it, quite off o' the hooks.
Cleaveland.

She was horribly bold, meddling and expensive, easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.
While Sheridan is off the hooks,
And friend Delany at his books. Swift.

8. HOOK. [In husbandry.] A field sown two years running. Ainsworth.

9. HOOK or Crook. One way or other; by any expedient; by any means direct or oblique. Ludicrous.

Which he by hook or crook had gather'd,
And for his own inventions father'd. Hudibras
He would bring him by hook or crook into his quarrel. Dryden.

To HOOK, hůůk. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish; upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, played with it, foiled it, and at length drew it out upon the bank. Addison.

2. To entrap; to ensnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

But she
I can hook to me. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

4. To fasten as with a hook.

5. To draw by force or artifice.

There are many branches of the natural law no way reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

HO'OKED, hůůk'ěd.[366] adj. [from hook.] Bent; curvated.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet grypus, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

Now thou threaten'st, with unjust decree,
To seize the prize which I so dearly bought:
Mean match to thine; for still above the rest,
Thy hook'd rapacious hands usurp the best. Dryden.
Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backsides of leaves. Grew.

HO'OKEDNESS, hůůk'ěd-nės. n. s. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HO'OKNOSED, hůůk-nůz'd'. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

I may justly say with the hooknosed fellow of Rome there, Cæsar, I came, saw, and overcame. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

HOOP, hůůp.[306] n. s. [hoep, Dutch.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood
Shall never leak. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
If I knew
What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge,
O' th' world, I would pursue it. Shaksp.
A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?
—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shaksp.
To view so lewd a town, and to refrain,
What hoops of iron could my spleen contain! Dryd.
And learned Athens to our art must stoop,
Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope.

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop:
The entry brush'd against her hoop. Swift.
All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at a distance. Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addis.

To HOOP, hůůp. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shaksp.
The casks for his majesty's shipping were hooped as a wine-cask, or hooped with iron. Raleigh.

2. To encircle; to clasp; to surround.

If ever henceforth thou
Shalt hoop his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
I hoop the firmament, and make
This my embrace the zodiack. Cleaveland.
That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake. Grew.

To HOOP, hůůp. v. n. [from wopgan or wopyan, Gothick; or houpper, French, derived from the Gothick. This word is generally written whoop, which is more proper if we deduce it from the Gothick; and hoop if we derive it from the French.] To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

To HOOP, hůůp. v. a.

1. To drive with a shout.

Dastard nobles
Suffer'd me, by the voice of slaves, to be Hoop'd out of Rome. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

2. To call by a shout.

HO'OPER, hůů'půr.[98] n. s. [from hoop, to enclose with hoops.] A cooper; one that hoops tubs.

HO'OPING-COUGH, hůů-pĭng-kŏf'. n. s. [or whooping-cough, from hoop, to shout.] A convulsive cough, so called from its noise; the chincough.

To HOOT, hůůt.[306] v. n. [hwt, Welsh; huer, French.]

1. To shout in contempt.

A number of country folks happened to pass thereby, who hollowed and hooted after me as at the arrantest coward. Sidney.
Matrons and girls shall hoot at thee no more. Dryden.

2. To cry as an owl.

Some keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots and wonders
At our queint sports. Shakspeare.

To HOOT, hůůt. v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.

We lov'd him; but, like beasts,
Our coward nobles gave way to your clusters,
Who did hoot him out o' th' city. Shakspeare.
The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoot!
That were I set up for that wooden god
That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,
Or the least bird from muting on my head. B. Jons.
Partridge and his clan may hoot me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment. Swift.

HOOT, hůůt. n. s. [huée, French, from the verb.] Clamour; shout; noise.

Its assertion would be entertained with the hoot of the rabble. Glanville's Scepsis.

To HOP, hŏp. v. n. [hoppan, Saxon; hoppen, Dutch.]

1. To jump; to skip lightly.

I would have thee gone,
And yet no farther than a wanton's bird,
That lets it hop a little from her hand,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again. Shaksp.
Go, hop me over ev'ry kennel home;
For you shall hop without my custom, sir. Shaksp.
Be kind and courteous to this gentleman,
Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes. Shaksp.
The painted birds, companions of the spring,
Hopping from spray to spray were heard. Dryden.
Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,
Did no Volpone, nor no Arbaces write;
But hopp'd about, and short excursions made
From bough to bough, as if they were afraid. Dryd.
Why don't we vindicate ourselves by trial ordeal, and hop over heated ploughshares blindfold?
Collier on Duelling.
I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

2. To leap on one leg.

Men with heads like dogs, and others with one huge foot alone, whereupon they did hop from place to place. Abbot.

3. To walk lamely, or with one leg less nimble or strong than the other; to limp; to halt.

The limping smith observ'd the sadden'd feast,
And hopping here and there, himself a jest,
Put in his word. Dryden's Homer.

4. To move; to play.

Softly feel
Her feeble pulse, to prove if any drop
Of living blood yet in her veins did hop. F. Queen.

HOP, hŏp. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A jump; a light leap.

2. A jump on one leg.

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Addison.

3. A place where meaner people dance. Ainsworth.

HOP, hŏp. n. s. [hop, Dutch; lupulus, Lat.] A plant.

It has a creeping root: the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower; the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each leafy scale is produced an horned ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed. Miller.
If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have,
For hop poles and crotches in lopping to save.
Tusser.
The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom. Bacon.
Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop. Bacon.

Next to thistles are hop strings, cut after the flowers are gathered. Derham.

Have the poles without forks, otherwise it will be troublesome to part the hop vines and the poles. Mortimer.

When you water hops, on the top of every hill put dissolved dung, which will enrich your hop hills. Mortimer.

In Kent they plant their hop gardens with apple-trees and cherry-trees between. Mortimer.

The price of hoeing of hop ground is forty shillings an acre. Mortimer.

Hop poles, the largest sort, should be about twenty foot long, and about nine inches in compass. Mortimer.

To Hop, hŏp. v. a. [from the noun.] To impregnate with hops.

Brew in October, and hop it for long keeping. Mortimer.

To increase the milk, diminished by flesh meat, take malt drink not much hopped. Arbuthnot.

HOPE, hōpe. n. s. [hopa, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing which is apt to delight him. Locke.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Job.

When in heav'n she shall his essence see,
This is her sov'reign good, and perfect bliss;
Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this. Davies.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;
But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now. Crashaw.

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. Taylor.

He sought them both, but wish'd his hap might find,
Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope
Of what so seldom chanc'd; when to his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton.

The Trojan dames
To Pallas' fane in long procession go,
In hopes to reconcile their heav'nly foe. Dryden.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on 't. L'Estrange.

To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for sight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Maccabees.

Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Ecclus.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoneers draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered. Shakspeare.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shaksp

She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thought, and ever in his sight. Dryden.

Hope, hōpe. n. s. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains. Ains.

To Hope, hōpe. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in expectation of some good.

Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Taylor.

My muse, by storms long tost,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;
And finds more favour by her ill success,
Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.

Who knows what adverse fortune may befall?
Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dry.

2. To place confidence in another.

He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Psalms.

To Hope, hōpe. v. a. To expect with desire

The sun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting winter mars our hop'd for hay. Shaksp.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

Ho'peful, hōpe'fûl. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

He will advance thee:
I know his noble nature, not to let
Thy hopeful service perish. Shakspeare.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince, whom you must not desert. Bacon.

What to the old can greater pleasure be,
Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore. Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand. Hooker.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope.

Ho'pefully, hōpe'fûl-ē. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earl's sons and heirs. Wotton.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish. Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature. Glanville.

Ho'pefulness, hōpe'fûl-nĕs. n. s. [from hopeful.] Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability. Wotton.

Ho'peless, hōpe'lĕs. adj. [from hope.]

1. Wanting hope; being without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hooker.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless. Shaks.

He watches with greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, us asunder;
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
To other speedy aid might lend at need Milton.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,
Seeks his advantage Dryden's State of Innocence.

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die. Dryden.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

The hopeless word of never to return,
Breathe I against thee upon pain of life. Shaksp.

Ho'per, hō'pûr.[98] n. s. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hopers, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents. Swift.

Ho'pingly, hō'pĭng-lē. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrours and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hammond.

Ho'pper, hŏp'pûr.[98] n. s. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg. Ains.

Ho'ppers, hŏp'pûrz. n. s. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

Ho'pper, hŏp'pûr. n. s. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremie or tremue.]

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill. Grew.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill; their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grist ground,
And mark the clack how justly it will sound. Betterton.

2. A basket for carrying seed. Ainsworth.

Ho'ral, hō'rål. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.

Howe'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

Ho'rary, hō'rå-rē. adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.

I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befell you,
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our worst erection. Hudibras.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers. Tatler.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a basket of summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of summer. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Horde, hōrde. n. s. A clan; a migratory crew of people. It is applied only to the Tartars.

Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form.
Thomson.

HORI'ZON, hŏ-rī'zŏn.[503] n. s. [ὁρίζων.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakspeare, ho'rizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates.
Shakspeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon.

In his east the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round,
Invested with bright rays. Milton.

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous sight.
Dryden.

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horrour that rises from such a prospect. Addison.

HORIZO'NTAL, hŏr-ė-zŏn'tăl. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus. Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbuthnot on Coins.

HORIZO'NTALLY, hŏr-ė-zŏn'tăl-ė. adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley.

HORN, hŏrn. n. s. [haurn, Gothick; horn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]

1. The hard bodies which grow on the heads of some graminivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.

No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon.

Zetus rises through the ground,
Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,
That tosses back his horns in vain. Addison.

All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley.

2. An instrument of wind musick made of horn.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. F. Q.

There's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news. Shaksp.

The goddess to her crooked horn
Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,
And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound.
Dryden.

Fair Ascanius, and his youthful train,
With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain.
Dryden.

3. The extremity of the waxing or waning moon, as mentioned by poets.

She bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryd.

The moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns.
Thomson.

4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shak.

Aufidius,
Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world,
Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out. Shaksp.

5. A drinking cup made of horn.

6. Antler of a cuckold.

If I have horns to make one mad,
Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad.
Shakspeare.

Merchants vent'ring through the main,
Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras.

7. HORN mad. Perhaps mad as a cuckold.

I am glad he went not in himself: if he had, he would have been horn mad. Shaksp.

HORNBE'AK, hŏrn'bēēk. } n. s. A kind of HORNFI'SH, hŏrn'fĭsh. } fish. Ainsw.

HO'RNBEAM, hŏrn'bēme. n. s. [horn and beam, Dut. for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]

It hath leaves like the elm or beach-tree. The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Miller.

HO'RNBOOK, hŏrn'bo͝ok. n. s. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.

He teaches boys the hornbook. Shaksp.

Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer. Locke.

To master John the English maid
A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;
And that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

HO'RNED, hŏr'nĕd. adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride;
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that, with the terrour of the shock,
Astonish'd both stand senseless as a block. F. Q.

Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead. Denham.

Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn
Suffices fatness to the fruitful corn. Dryden.

HO'RNER, hŏr'nŭr.[98] n. s. [from horn.] One that works in horn, and sells horns.

The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns. Grew.

HO'RNET, hŏr'nĕt.[99] n. s. [hyrnette, Sax. from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.

Silence, in times of suff'ring, is the best;
'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest. Dryd.

Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Mortimer.

I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham.

HO'RNFOOT, hŏrn'fo͝ot. n. s. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantick men, that did not inly quake!
With hornfoot horses, and brass wheels, Jove's storms to emulate. Hakewill.

HO'RNOWL, hŏrn'o͝ul. n. s. A kind of horned owl. Ainsworth.

HO'RNPIPE, hŏrn'pīpe. n. s. [horn and pipe.] A country dance, danced commonly to a horn.

A lusty tabrere,
That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,
Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid.
Spenser.

There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis.
Raleigh.

Let all the quicksilver i' the mine
Run to the feet veins, and refine
Your firkum jerkum to a dance
Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,
To wonder at the hornpipes here
Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Ben Jonson.

Florinda danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler.

HO'RNSTONE, hŏrn'stōne. n. s. A kind of blue stone. Ainsworth.

HOROLOGY, hŏ-rŏl'ŏ-jė.[518] } gium, Latin.] Any instrument that tells the hour: as, a clock; a watch; an hourglass.

He 'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drink rock not his cradle. Shaksp.

Before the days of Jerome there were horologies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammia. Brown.

HORO'METRY, hŏ-rŏm'ė-trė.[518] n. s. [horometrie, French; ὥρα and μετρεω.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown.

HORO'SCOPE, hŏr'rŏ-skōpe. n. s. [horoscope, French; ὡροσκοπος.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living creatures. Brown.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
His sire the blear-ey'd Vulcan of a shop,

From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school.
Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope,
This governs life, and this marks out our parts.
Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Creech.

They understood the planets and the zodiack by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. Bent.

HO'RRENT, hôr'rênt. adj. [horrens, Latin. Horrentia pilis agmina.] Pointed outward; bristled with points: a word perhaps introduced by Milton.

Him a globe
Of fiery seraphim incircled round
With bright imblazonry, and horrent arms. Milt.

HO'RRIBLE, hôr'rê-bl.[160] adj. [horrible, French; horribilis, Latin.] Dreadful; terrible; shocking; hideous; enormous.

No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be sights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon.

A dungeon horrible on all sides round,
As one great furnace flamed. Milton.

O sight
Of terrour, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel. Milton.

Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are, of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South.

HO'RRIBLENESS, hôr'rê-bl-nês. n. s. [from horrible.] Dreadfulness; hideousness; terribleness; fearfulness.

1. Terrour mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.

Over them sad horrour, with grim hue,
Did always soar, beating his iron wings;
And after him owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy things. F. Queen.

Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
A trembling horrour in our souls we find. Davies.

Me damp horrour chill'd
At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold.
Milton.

Deep horrour seizes ev'ry human breast;
Their pride is humbled, and their fear confest.
Dryden.

2. Dreadful thoughts.

I have supt full with horrours;
Direness, familiar to my slaught'rous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shaksp.

3. Gloom; drearness.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horrour on the woods. Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shrinking.
Quincy.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horrour. Bacon.

HORSE, hôrse. n. s. [hopr, Saxon.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.

Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shaksp.

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! Shak.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses. Locke.

2. A constellation.

Thy face, bright centaur, autumn's heats retain,
The softer season suiting to the man;
Whilst winter's shiv'ring goat afflicts the horse
With frost, and makes him an uneasy course.
Creech.

3. To take horse; to set out to ride.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison.

4. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination, for horses, horsemen, or cavalry.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was 't came by? Shak.

The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repulsing of the enemy at their landing. Bacon.

If they had known that all the king's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have march'd away with their horse. Clarendon.

Th' Arcadian horse
With ill success engage the Latin force. Dryden.

5. Something on which any thing is supported: as, a horse to dry linen on.

6. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes called a timber mare.

7. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse: as, a horse-face, a face of which the features are large and indelicate.

To HORSE, hôrse. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mount upon a horse; to furnish with a horse.

He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cart-jades, and so furnished, as I thought with myself, if that were thrift, I wisht none of my friends ever to thrive. Sidney.

After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonzalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horsed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who 's this? Who answered, It is St. Elmo, who never appears but after the storm.
Bacon.

2. To carry one on the back.

3. To ride any thing.

Stalls, bulks, windows
Are smother'd, leads are fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shaksp.

HOST, hōst. n. s. [hoste, French; hospes, hospitis, Latin.]

1. One who gives entertainment to another.

Homer never entertained either guests or hosts with long speeches, till the mouth of hunger be stopped. Sidney.

Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host. Shaksp.

2. The landlord of an inn.

Time 's like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;
But with his arms out stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer. Shaksp.

3. [from hostis, Latin.] An army, numbers assembled for war.

Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear 't before him; thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host. Shaksp.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
And craze your chariot wheels. Milton.

After these came arm'd, with spear and shield,
An host so great as cover'd all the field. Dryden.

4. Any great number.

Give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell
Themselves, when they be felt. Shaksp.

2. A woman that keeps a house of publick entertainment.

Undistinguish'd civility is like a whore or a hostess. Temple.

HO'STESS-SHIP, hōst'ĕs-shĭp. n. s. [from hostess.] The character of an hostess.

It is my father's will I should take on me
The hostess-ship o' th' day: you're welcome, sirs. Shakspeare.

HO'STILE, hŏs'tĭl.[140] adj. [hostilis, Lat.] Adverse; opposite; suitable to an enemy.

He has now at last
Giv'n hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it. Shaksp.

Fierce Juno's hate
Added to hostile force, shall urge thy fate. Dryden.

HOSTI'LITY, hŏs-tĭl'ĕ-tē. n. s. [hostilité, French; from hostile.] The practices of an open enemy; open war; opposition in war.

Neither by treason, nor hostility
To seek to put me down, and reign thyself. Shaksp.

Hostility being thus suspended with France, preparation was made for war against Scotland. Hayw.

What peace can we return,
But, to our pow'r hostility and hate,
Untam'd reluctance and revenge? Milton.

We have shew'd ourselves fair, nay, generous adversaries; and have carried on even our hostilities with humanity. Atterbury.

HO'STLER, ŏs'lŭr.[394 472] n. s. [hosteller, from hostel.] One who has the care of horses at an inn.

The cause why they are now to be permitted is want of convenient inns for lodging travellers on horseback, and hostlers to tend their horses by the way. Spenser.

HO'STRY, hŏ'trē. n. s. [corrupted from hostelry.] A place where the horses of guests are kept.

Swift rivers are with sudden ice constrain'd,
And studded wheels are on its back sustain'd;
An hostry now for waggons, which before
Tall ships of burden on its bosom bore. Dryden.

HOT, hŏt. adj. [hat, Saxon; hat, Scotish.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?
——Thou 'lt be afraid to hear it.
—No, though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell. Shaksp.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing so hot as about nine in the forenoon. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles. Newton.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have
Luxuriously pick'd out. Shaksp.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember,
Jove, thou was't a bull for thy Europa. Shaksp.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthagena, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults that hath been known. Bacon.

He resolved to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and plied it with artillery. Clarendon.

To court the cry directs us, when we found
The assault so hot as if 't were only there. Denham.

Our army
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.

4. Ardent; vehement; precipitate.

Come, come, lord Mortimer, you are as slow,
As hot lord Percy is on fire to go. Shaksp.

HO'TCHPOTCH, hŏdje'pŏdje. } en poche, French; or hachée en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled hash; a mixture; a confused mass.

Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babellish confusion than any one entire language. Camden.

A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture of hotch-potch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Bacon.

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcass would remain;
But a mash'd heap, a hotchpotch of the slain. Dryd.

HOTCO'CKLES, hŏt-kŏk'klz. n. s. [hautes coquilles, Fr.] A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.

The chytindra is certainly not our hotcockles; for that was by pinching, not by striking. Arbuthnot and Pope.

As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye. Gay.

HOTHEA'DED, hŏt'hĕd-ĕd. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passionate.

One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and publick liberty; nor a hotheaded crackbrained coxcomb forward for a scheme of moderation. Arbuthnot.

HO'THOUSE, hŏt'hŏŭse. n. s. [hot and house.]

1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.

To HO'VER, hŭv'ûr.[165] v. n. [hovio, to hang over, Welsh.]

1. To hang in the air overhead, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hovers in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Shakspeare.

Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation. Shakspeare.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden.

Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it. Addison.

'Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies. Prior.

Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night. Pope.

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.

The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hovereth in expectation of new worlds. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To wander about one place.

We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates. Addison.

The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possesses itself of it; in the other, it only hovers about it. Locke.

HOUGH, hŏk.[393] n. s. [hoꝛ, Saxon.]

1. The lower part of the thigh.

Blood shall be from the sword unto the belly, and dung of men into the camel's hough. 2 Esdras.

2. [hue, Fr.] An adz; a hoe. See HOE.

How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shaksp.

2. A particular time.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shakspeare.

When we can intreat an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakspeare.

The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

3. The time as marked by the clock.

The hour runs through the roughest day. Shaks.

Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man, who kept good hours. Tatler.

They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight. Addison.

HO'URGLASS, ôûr'glâs. n. s. [hour and glass.]

1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.

Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hourglass than the day's clearness. Sidney.

In sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.

Shake not his hourglass when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon.

That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shakspeare.

Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

They with ceaseless cry
Surround me as thou saw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryd.

HO'URPLATE, ôûr'plâte. n. s. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours, pointed by the hand of a clock, are inscribed.

If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness. Locke.

HOUSE, hôûse.[313] n. s. [hus, Sax. huys, Dutch; huse, Scotish.]

1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.

Sparrows must not build in his house eaves. Shakspeare.

Houses are built to live in, not to look on; therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon.

In a house the doors are moveable, and the room square; yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Watts.

2. Any place of abode.

The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shakspeare.

HO'USEHOLD, hôûs'hôld. n. s. [house and hold.]

1. A family living together.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny. Shaksp.

A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom. Bacon

Of God observ'd
The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wond'rous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.

He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith: in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Sprat.

Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,
And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all. Dryden.

Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.

In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His houshold twice a day to prayers. Swift.

To define a barge and hoy, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard. Watts' Logick.

Hu'bbub, hûb'bûb. n. s. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, up, or hobnob.] A tumult; a riot.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people. Clarendon.

An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence. Milton.

Why wolves raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs howl when she shines in water. Hudibras.

Hu'ckaback, hûk'kâ-bâk. n. s. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised.

Hu'cklebacked, hûk'kl-bâkt. adj. [hocker, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

Hu'cklebone, hûk'kl-bône. n. s. [from hucken, Dut. to sit down.] The hipbone.

Hu'ckster, hûks'tûr.[98] } n. s. [hock,
Hu'cksterer, hûks'tûr-ûr. } German, a pedlar; hockster, a she-pedlar.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise. Government of the Tongue.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion. South.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down you fall,
And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,
The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,
But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown. Gay.

There should be a confederacy of all servants, to drive those China hucksters from the doors. Swift.

Those hucksterers or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass-money is made current. Swift.

2. A trickish mean fellow.

Now the ape wanted his huckster man. Hub. T.

To Hu'ckster, hûks'tûr. v. n. [from the noun.] To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling, for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade. Swift.

To Hu'ddle, hûd'dl.[405] v. a. [probably from hood.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to mobble.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.

At twelve she rose with much ado;
Her cloaths were huddled on by two. Prior.

Now all in haste they huddle on
Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone. Swift.

3. To cover up in haste.

4. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play huddled up in haste. Dryden.

When continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work with timely care,
Which else is huddled when the skies are fair. Dryden.

5. To throw together in confusion.

Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

To Hu'ddle, hûd'dl. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shaksp.

Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner. Bacon.

Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things; and, huddling forwards, fall from high places. Brown.

Hu'ddle, hûd'dl.[405] n. s. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion: with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. Glanville.

Your carrying business in a huddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model. Hudibras.

Nature doth nothing in a huddle. L'Estrange.

The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote, and in a huddle. Locke.

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas. Addison.

Hue, hû.[335] n. s. [hiepe, Saxon.]

1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady she before did view,
Or that dread lyon's look her cast in deadly hue. Spenser.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakspeare.

Flow'rs of all hue, and without thorn the rose. Milton.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue,
Answer'd. Milton.

Your's is much of the camelion hue,
To change the die with distant view. Dryden.

2. [huée, French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; and alarm given to the country. It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight, I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakspeare.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;
And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addison.

The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Hu'er, hû'ûr. n. s. [huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard. Carew's Survey.

Huff, hûf. n. s. [from hove, or hoven, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment: huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sullen anger or arrogance.

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To swear by, only in a lord;
In others it is but a huff,
To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras.

His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose huff
All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness. L'Estrange.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction. L'Estrange.

No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present huff. South.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who 's the greatest plotter. Dryd.

Lewd shallow-brained huffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit. South.

To HUFF, hŭf. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Grew.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to Dr. Hough, you must not presume to huff us. Eachard.

To HUFF, hŭf. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him. Otway.

A thief and justice, fool and knave,
A huffing officer and slave. Hudibras.
Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to cred'lous fools a knave Roscommon.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.

Now what 's his end? O charming glory say!
What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play? Dryden.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with. Locke.

When Peg received John's message she huffed and stormed like the devil. Arbuthnot.

HU'FFER, hŭf'fŭr.[98] n. s. [from huff.] A blusterer; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art
To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,
By such a braggadocio huffer. Hudibras.

HU'FFISH, hŭf'fish. adj. [from huff.] Arrogant; insolent; hectoring.

HU'FFISHLY, hŭf'fish-lė. adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying bluster.

HU'FFISHNESS, hŭf'fish-nės. n. s. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.

To HUG, hŭg. v. a. [hegian, Saxon, to hedge, to enclose.]

1. To press close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,
And hugg'd me in his arms. Shaksp.

What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade? L'Estrange.

Ev'n in that urn their brother they confess,
And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press. Dryden.

King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak, which he would hug and kiss. Harvey.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton.

We hug deformities, if they bear our names. Glanville.

Admire yourself,
And, without rival, hug your darling book. Roscommon.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms hug the abuse. South.

Mark with what joy he hugs the dear discovery! Rowe.

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly hug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them. Atterbury.

4. To gripe in wrestling.

HUG, hŭg. n. s. [from the noun.]

1. Close embrace.

Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him. Gay.

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Cornish hug.

HUGE, hūje. adj. [hoogh, high, Dutch.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the estate of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but America. Abbot.

2. Very great.

The mountain huge. Milton.

Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean; there leviathan,
Hugest of living creatures, in the deep
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land. Milton.

3. Great even to deformity or terribleness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder. Shakspeare.

Through forests huge, and long unravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown he wanders waste. Thomson.

HU'GELY, hūje'lė. adv. [from huge.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shaksp.

2. Greatly; very much.

I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.

HU'GENESS, hūje'nės. n. s. [from huge.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakspeare.

HU'GGERMUGGER, hŭg'gŭr-mŭg-gŭr. n. s. [corrupted perhaps from hugger morcker, or hug in the dark. Morcker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by sir Thomas More, hoker moker. Hóker, in Chaucer, is peevish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determine.] Secrecy; byplace.

Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Hubberd.

But if I can but find them out,
Where'er th' in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy work. Hudibras.

There 's a distinction betwixt what 's done openly and bare-faced, and a thing that 's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment. L'Estrange.

HU'GY, hŭ'jė. adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great; huge. Not in use.

This hugy rock one finger's force apparently will move. Carew.

HUKE, hūke. n. s. [huque, Fr.] A cloak.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger, in a rich huke. Bacon's New Atlantis.

HULK, hŭlk. n. s. [hulcke, Dutch; hulc, Saxon.]

1. The body of a ship.

There 's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Shakspeare.

The custom of giving the colour of the sea to the hulks, sails, and mariners of their spy boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti. Arbuthnot.

They Argo's hulk will tax,
And scrape their pitchy sides for wax. Swift.
The sooty hulk
Steer'd sluggish on. Thomson.

2. Any thing bulky and unwieldy. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, a hulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk sir John,
Is prisoner to your son. Shakspeare.

To HULK, hŭlk. v. a. To exenterate: as, to hulk a hare. Ainsworth.

HULL, hŭl. n. s. [hulgan, Gothick, to cover.]

1. The husk or integument of any thing; the outer covering: as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [hule, Scotish.]

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a thinking creature. Grew.

To HULL, hŭl. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of piteous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcase of a ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.
—No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Shakspeare.

He look'd and saw the ark hull on the flood. Milton.

People walking down upon the shore, saw some what come hulling toward them. L'Estrange.

HU'LLY, hŭl'lė. adj. [from hull.] Siliquose; husky. Ainsworth.

HU'LVER, hŭl'vŭr. n. s. Holly.

Save hulver and thorn, thereof flail for to make. Tusser.

To HUM, hŭm. v. a. [homelan, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Bacon.

An airy nation flew
Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew
In summer's heat. Dryden.

So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.

I think he 'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakspeare.

Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakspeare.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, you'll rue. Shaksp.

3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And humm'd upon it, thus he writ. Hudibras.
I still acquiest,
And never humm'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuffled treason. Hudibras.
The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L'Estrange.

4. To make a dull heavy noise.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate hummings; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glanville.
Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope.

5. To sing low.

Hum half a tune. Pope.

6. To applaud. Approbation was commonly expressed in public assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM, hŭm. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecat's summon
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakspeare.
Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who muses through the woods at noon. Thomson.

2. A low confused noise, as of bustling crowds at a distance.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army still resounds. Shaksp.
Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton.
One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilom of requests was call'd the court,
But now the great exchange of news 'tis hight,
And full of hum and buz from morn 'till night. Dryden.

3. Any low dull noise.

Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast: the distant nodded to the hum. Pope.

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

These shrugs, these hums and haws,
When you have said she 's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say she 's honest. Shaksp.
Your excuses want some grains to make 'em current: hum and ha will not do the business. Dryd.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for ham.

And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their hums
And the horses' backs, on which they straddle,
And every man eat up his saddle. Hudibras.

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a hum in the right place. Spectator.

HUM, hŭm. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your ears despise the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.
—Hum! I guess at it. Shakspeare.
See sir Robert—hum!
And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.

HU'MAN, hū'mân.[88] adj. [humanus, Lat. humain, Fr.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature? Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakspeare.
For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton.
The serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milton.
Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMA'NE, hū-mâne'. adj. [humaine, Fr.] Kind; civil; benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon.
Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Sprat.

HUMA'NELY, hū-mâne'lė. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakspeare.

HU'MANIST, hū'mâ-nĭst. n. s. [humaniste, Fr.] A philologer; a grammarian: a term used in the schools of Scotland.

HUMA'NITY, hū-mân'ė-tė. n. s. [humanité, Fr. humanitas, Latin.]

1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself: reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.
A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shaksp.
The middle of humanity thou never knew'st, but the extremity of both ends. Shakspeare.
To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his information. Glanville.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.

All men ought to maintain peace and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.
How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Rowe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores literæ.

To HU'MANIZE, hū'mân-ize. v. a. [humainiser, Fr.] To soften; to make susceptive of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe,
And here my faithful tears in show'rs shall flow,
To humanize the flints whereon I tread. Wotton.
Was it the business of magick to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HU'MANKIND, hū-mân-kyĭnd'. n. s. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd:
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

HU'MANLY, hū'mân-lė. adv. [from human.]

1. After the notions of men; according to the power of men.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Atterbury.

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This is now written humanely.

Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

HU'MBIRD, hŭm'bûrd. n. s. [from hum and bird.] The humming bird.

All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shewed one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

HU'MBLE, ŭm'bl.[394 466] adj. [humble, Fr. humilis, Lat.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield. Spenser.
Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a-doing. Shakspeare.
Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, till the point of death. Shakspeare.
We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins, as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor.
You, if an humble husband, may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryden.
Ten thousand frifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:
She should be humble who would please;
And she must suffer who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!
Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.
Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.
Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell
With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty! Rowe.

Is cramm'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride. Shaksp.

HU'MBLEPLANT, ûm'bl-plânt. n. s. A species of sensitive plant.

The humbleplant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again: it is raised in hotbeds. Mortimer.

HU'MBLES, ûm'blz.[405] n. s. Entrails of a deer.

HU'MBLESS, ûm'blês. n. s. [from humble.] Humbleness; humility. Obsolete.

And with meek humbless, and afflicted mood,
Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat. Spenser.

HU'MBLY, ûm'blê. adv. [from humble.]

1. Without pride; with humility; modestly; with timorous modesty.

They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shaksp.

Here the tam'd Euphrates humbly glides,
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides. Dryden.

Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I 'll adore;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more. Addison.

2. Without height; without elevation.

HU'MDRUM, hûm'drûm. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone.] Dull; dronish; stupid.

Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum,
And see stout Bruin, all alone,
By numbers basely overthrown? Hudibras.

I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison.

To HUME'CT, hû-mêkt'. } v. a.
To HUME'CTATE, hû-mêk'tâte. }

[humecto, Latin; humecter, French.] To wet; to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and contemporate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations. Brown.

Her rivers are divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil. Howell.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Wiseman.

HUMECTA'TION, hû-mêk-tâ'shûn. n. s. [humectation, Fr. from humectate.] The act of wetting; moistening.

Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without humectation, or entrance of any body. Bacon.

That which is concreted by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay. Brown.

HU'MERAL, hû'mê-râl. adj. [humeral, Fr. from humerus, Latin.] Belonging to the shoulder.

The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

HUMICUBA'TION, hû-mîk-û-bâ'shûn. n. s. [humi and cubo, Latin.] The act of lying on the ground.

Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humicubations, used to be companions of repentance. Bramhall.

HU'MID, hû'mîd. adj. [humide, French; humidus, Latin.] Wet; moist; watery.

Iris there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingl'd hue
Than her purpled scarf can shew. Milton.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryden.

If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

HUMI'DITY, hû-mîd'ê-tê. n. s. [humidité, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies.

Humidity differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores of surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to: but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the greatest standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing, for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We 'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumpion. Shaksp.

O blessing-breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb
Infect the air! Shaksp.

Young animals have more tender fibres and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relishing. Arbuthnot.

HUMILIA'TION, hû-mîl-ê-â'shûn. n. s. [Fr.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milton.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown.

With tears
Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMI'LITY, hû-mîl'ê-tê. n. s. [humilité, French.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shaksp.

What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.

The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarendon.

There are some that use
Humility to serve their pride, and seem
Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wish'd journey's end. Denham.

It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honour, or to begin a fast after dinner. South.

As high turrets for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.

With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.

HU'MMER, hûm'mûr.[98] n. s. [from hum.] That which hums; an applauder. Ains.

HU'MORAL, yû'mô-rûl.[394 88] adj. [from humour.] Proceeding of the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.

HU'MORIST, yû'mûr-ist. n. s. [humoristo, Italian; humoriste, French.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison.

2. One who has odd conceits.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spectator.

3. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wise and timeous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HU'MOROUS, yû'mûr-ûs.[314] adj. [from humour.]

1. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Manya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satire Marsyas who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety. Shaksp.

He's humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congeal'd in the spring of day. Shaksp.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay:
What doth make you thus delay? Ben Jonson.

Vast is his courage, boundless in his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Dryd.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts' Logick.

3. Pleasant; jocular.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;
And pensive, wav'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what. Prior.

HU'MOROUSLY, yû'mûr-ûs-lê. adv. [from humorous.]

1. Merrily; jocosely.

A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls very humorously, concisum argentum in titulos faciesque minutas. Addison.

It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

2. Capriciously; whimsically.

We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, sillily, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Calamy.

HU'MOROUSNESS, yû'mûr-ûs-nês. n. s. [from humorous.]

1. Fickleness; capricious levity.
2. Jocularity; oddness of conceit.

HU'MORSOME, yû'mûr-sûm. adj. [from humour.]

1. Peevish; petulant.
2. Odd; humorous. In this sense it is less used.

Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades, where the wit of both sexes is altogether taken up in continuing singular and humorsome disguises. Swift.

HU'MORSOMELY, yû'mûr-sûm-lê. adv. [from humorsome.] Peevishly; petulantly.

HU'MOUR, yû'mûr.[314] [394] n. s. [humeur, Fr. humor, Latin.]

1. Moisture.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

2. The different kinds of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton.

3. General turn or temper of mind.

As there is no humour to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney.

There came a young lord, led with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whose goodness he sees not. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lusen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was? they said Lusen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lusen: then, said the king, I will be king of Lusen. Bacon.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd,
And which the ruling passion of your mind.
Roscommon.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Dryden.

In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison.

Good humour only teaches charms to last,
Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past.
Pope.

4. Present disposition.

It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the blood-house of life. Shaksp.

Another thought her nobler humour fed. Fairfax.

Their humours are not to be won,
But when they are imposed upon. Hudibras.

Tempt not his heavy hand;
But one submissive word which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularity; merriment.

In conversation humour is more than wit, easiness more than knowledge. Temple.

6. Tendency to disease; morbid disposition.

He denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.

The child had a humour which was cured by the waters of Glastonbury. Fielding.

7. Petulance; peevishness.

Is my friend all perfection, all virtue, and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed? South.

8. A trick; a practice.

I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in some humours: I should have borne the humour'd letter to her. Shaksp.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.

In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in consort, men are more obnoxious to others humours; therefore it is good to take both. Bacon.

To HU'MOUR, yû'mûr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gratify; to sooth by compliance.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shaksp.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,
He should not humour me. Shaksp.

Obedience and subjection were never enjoin'd by God to humour the passions, lusts and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governours Swift.

You humour me, when I am sick;
Why not when I am splenetick? Pope.

Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and sullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy Watts' Logick.

2. To fit; to comply with.

To after age thou shalt be writ the man,
That with smooth air could humour best our tongue.
Milton.

'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention. Dryden.

Fontainbleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature. Addison.

HUMP, hûmp. n. s. [corrupted perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the hump fell. Tatler.

HU'MPBACK, hûmp'bâk. n. s. [hump and back.] Crooked back; high shoulders.

The chief of the family was born with a humpback and very high nose. Tatler.

HUMPBA'CKED, hûmp'bâkt. adj. Having a crooked back.

To HUNCH, hûnsh. v. a. [husch, German.]

1. To strike or punch with the fists.

Jack's friends began to hunch and push one another: why don't you go and cut the poor fellow down? Arbuthnot.

2. [hocker, a crooked back, German.] To crook the back.

Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back,
And wander'd in thy limbs. Dryden.

HUNCHBA'CKED, hûnsh'bâkt.[359] adj. [hunch and back.] Having a crooked back.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flat-nosed, and hunchbaked. L'Estrange.

But I more fear Creon!
To take that hunchback'd monster in my arms,
Th' excrescence of a man. Dryd. and Lee's Œdip.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with saucer eyes, a sharp nose, and hunchbacked. Arbuthnot.

HU'NDRED, hûn'drêd, or hûn'dûrd. adj. [hund, and hundpeð, Saxon; honderd, Dutch.] The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke,
A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryd.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HU'NDRED, hûn'drêd.[417] n. s.

1. A company, body, or collection consisting of a hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whosoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbuthnot.

2. A canton or division of a country, perhaps once containing a hundred manors. [hundredum, low Latin; hundrede, old French.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket usually sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited. Hayward.

HU'NDREDTH, hûn'drêdth. adj. [hundpeontezopa, Saxon.] The ordinal of a hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making invectives. Hooker.

If this medium is rather within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hun- dredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop. Newton.

HUNG, hŭng. The pret. and part. pass. of hang.

A wife so hung with virtues, such a freight,
What mortal shoulders can support? Dryden.
A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once. Watts.

HU'NGER, hŭng'gŭr.[409] n. s. [hunger, Sax. honger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty and the fibres in their natural tensions, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach. Quincy.
Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst. Deuteronomy.
The subacid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger. Grew.
Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger. Arbuth.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.
For hunger of my gold I dye. Dryden.

To HU'NGER, hŭng'gŭr.[98] v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

My more having, would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more. Shaksp.
Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness; to long.

Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little. Shaksp.
I content me,
And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed
Me hung'ring more to do my Father's will. Milton.

HU'NGERBIT, hŭng'gŭr-bĭt.
HU'NGERBITTEN, hŭng'gŭr-bĭt-t'n.[103] adj. [hunger and bit.] Pained or weakened with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten. Job.
Thyself
Bred up in poverty and straits at home;
Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton.

HU'NGERLY, hŭng'gŭr-lė. adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

His beard
Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ask
His sops as he was drinking. Shaksp.

HU'NGERLY, hŭng'gŭr-lė. adv. With keen appetite.

You have sav'd my longing, and I feed
Most hungerly on your sight. Shaksp.
They are all but stomachs, and we all but food,
They eat us hungerly, and, when they 're full,
They belch us. Shaksp.

HU'NGERSTARVED, hŭng'gŭr-stârv'd'. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shaksp.
Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men.
Shakspeare.
As to some holy house th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,
Want and diseases, fled before her name. Dryden.

HU'NGRED, hŭng'gŭr'd.[389] adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungered love to smell hot bread. Bacon.

HU'NGRILY, hŭng'grė-lė. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suffering mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungrily they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden.

HU'NGRY, hŭng'grė. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakspeare.
By eating before he was hungry, and drinking before he was dry, he was sure never to eat or drink much at a time. Temple.
They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolifick; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shaksp.
The more fat water will bear soap best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.
In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.
To the great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soils. Smalridge.

HUNKS, hŭngks. n. s. [hunsker, sordid, Islandick.] A covetous sordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

The old hunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings. L'Estrange.
She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunks. Dryden.
Irus has given all the intimations of being a close hunks worth money. Addison.

To HUNT, hŭnt. v. a. [huntian, Saxon, from hund, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd was kill'd in hunting him. Shakspeare.
Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job.
We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down; however formidable and overgrown; and on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Psalms.
The heart strikes five hundred sorts of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that fain would it break. Harvey.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.
All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison.

To HUNT, hŭnt. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shaksp.
Esau went to the field to hunt for venison. Gen.
One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.
On the old pagan tombs, masks, hunting matches, and bacchanals are very common. Addison.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT, hŭnt. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd
By sov'reign pow'r, her company disdain'd,
Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryden.

2. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green.
Shakspeare.

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escap'd the hunt. Shaksp.

HU'NTER, hŭn'tŭr. n. s. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pastime or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, boggs, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies.
Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursued a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton.
Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryd.
This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Add.
Bold Nimrod first the savage chace began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shaksp.

HU'NTINGHORN, hŭn'tĭng-hôrn. n. s. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HU'NTRESS, hŭn'trĕs. n. s. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey,
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway.
Shakspeare.
Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.
Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope.
Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broome.

HU'NTSMAN, hŭnts'măn.[88] n. s. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a huntsman, after weary chase,

Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser.
Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntsman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chace? Waller.

3. The servant whose office is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the huntsman that managed the chace, than to the master. L'Estr.

HU'NTSMANSHIP, hûnts'mân-ship. n. s. [from huntsman.] The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give the art of rhiming, huntsmanship, or play.

That with the hurly death itself awakes. Shaksp.
Poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation. Shaksp.
Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot. Shaksp.
All places were filled with tumult and hurlyburly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles.

HU'RRICANE, hûr'rė-kân. } n. s. [hura-
HU'RRICANO, hûr-rė-ka'nò. } can, Span. ouragan, Fr.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
You cataracts and hurricanoes spout! Shaksp.
A storm or hurricano, though but the force of air, makes a strange havock where it comes. Burnet.
A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end.
Dryden.
The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;
There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whisp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryd.
So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.
Addison.

HU'RRIER, hûr'rė-ûr. n. s. [from hurry.] One that hurries; a disturber.

Mars, that horrid hurrier of men. Chapman.

To HU'RRY, hûr'rė. v. n. [heꝑgian, to plunder, Saxon; hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends. Shaksp.
For whom all this haste
Of midnight march, and hurry'd meeting here?
Milton.
Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy it. South.
That hurry'd o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore.
Dryden.
A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage.
Addison.
Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away. Rowe.

A family governed with order, will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage, and pasturage. Temple

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find, that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.

2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.

There's husbandry in heaven;
The candles are all out. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

You have already saved several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestick affairs.

Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shaksp.

HUSH, hûsh. interj. [without etymology.] Silence! be still! no noise!

The king hath done you wrong; but hush! 'tis so. Shakspeare.

There 's something else to do; hush and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakspeare.

HUSH, hûsh. adj. [from the interjection.] Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stands still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakspeare.

To HUSH, hûsh. v. n. [from the interjection.] To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame did blush;
Another seemed envious or coy;
Another in her teeth did knaw a rush;
But at these strangers presence every one did hush. Spenser.

To HUSH, hûsh. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be husht, and nought at all to say. Shaksp.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blust'ring land. Shakspeare.

Speak softly;
All 's husht as midnight yet. Shakspeare.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me. Shak.

When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,
Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then
Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love? Otway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.

Her sire at length is kind,
Calms every storm, and hushes every wind;
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

The court was hushed, and a whisper ran. Addis.

To HUSH up, hûsh-ûp. v. a. To suppress in silence; to forbid to be mentioned.

This matter is hushed up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.

HU'SHMONEY, hûsh'mûn-ê. n. s. [hush and money.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

A dext'rous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushmoney sends to all the neighbours round;
His master, unsuspicious of his pranks,
Pays all the costs, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.

HUSK, hûsk. n. s. [huldsch, Dutch, or huyscken, from huys.] The outmost integument of fruits.

Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Shakspeare.

Most seeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon.

Thy food shall be
The fresh brook mussels, withered roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakspeare.
Fruits of all kinds, in coat
Rough or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell,
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
Heaps with unsparing hand. Milton.
Some steep their seeds, and some in cauldrons boil
O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husks with fruitful grain. Dryden.
Some, when the press
Has drain'd the pulpous mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; thou, more wise, shalt steep
The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine. Philips.
Barely for ptisan was first steeped in water till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat till the husk was taken off, and ground. Arbuthnot.
Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest you feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts.

To HUSK, hůsk. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.

HYDRAU'LICK, hi-drâw'lĭk. } hydraulicks.] Relating to the conveyance of water through pipes.
Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted, and other hydraulical engines. Derham.
We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulick engine, in which a chemical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels. Arbuthnot and Pope.

HYDRAU'LICKS, hi-drâw'lĭks. n. s. [ὕδωρ, water, and ἀυλὸς, a pipe.] The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

HYDROCE'LE, hi'drò-sėle. n. s. [ὑδροκηλὴ; hydrocele, French.] A watery rupture.

HYDROCE'PHALUS, hi-drò-sĕf'fâ-lŭs. n. s. [ὕδωρ and κεφαλὴ.] A dropsy in the head.
A hydrocephalus, or dropsy of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain. Arbuthnot on Diet.

HYDRO'GRAPHER, hi-drŏg'grâ-fûr. n. s. [ὕδωρ and γράφω; hydrographe, French.] One who draws maps of the sea.
It may be drawn from the writings of our hydrographer. Boyle.

HYDRO'GRAPHY, hi-drŏg'grâ-fė.[518] n. s. [ὕδωρ and γράφω; hydrographie, Fr.] Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.

HY'DROMANCY, hi'drò-măn-sė.[518] n. s. [ὕδωρ and μαντία; hydromantie, French.] Prediction by water.
Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, acromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe.

HY'DROMEL, hi'drò-mĕl. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέλι; hydromel, French.] Honey and water.
Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient. Mortimer.
In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were ptisans and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbuthnot.

HYDRO'METER, hi-drŏm'mė-tûr.[518] n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον.] An instrument to measure the extent or profundity of water.

HYDRO'METRY, hi-drôm'mè-trè. n. s. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον.] The act of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHO'BIA, hi-drò-fò'bè-â. n. s. [ὑδροφοβία; hydrophobie, French.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia, or dread of water, is the most remarkable. Quincy.

HYDRO'PICAL, hi-drôp'pè-kâl. } adj. [ὑδροπικος; hydropique, French; from hydrops, Latin.]
HYDRO'PICK, hi-drôp'pik. }

1. Dropsical; diseased with extravasated water.

Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydropical water. Bacon.

The world's whole sap is sunk:
The general balm th' hydropick earth hath drunk. Donne.

Hydropical swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. Wiseman.

Hydropick wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away;
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackm.

One sort of remedy, he uses in dropsies, the water of the hydropicks. Arbuthnot.

2. Resembling dropsy.

Some men's hydropick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Every lust is a kind of hydropick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson.

HYDROSTA'TICAL, hi-drò-stât'è-kâl. adj. [ὑδωρ and στατικη.] Relating to hydrostaticks; taught by hydrostaticks.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcileable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst. Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICALLY, hi-drò-stât'è-kâl-è. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostaticks.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass. Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICKS, hi-drò-stât'iks. n. s. [ὕδωρ and στατικη; hydrostatique, Fr.] The science of weighing fluids, or weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDRO'TICK, hi-drôt'ik. n. s. [ὕδωρ; hydrotique, French.] Purger of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile. Arbuthnot.

HYE'N, hi'ên. } n. s. [hyene, Fr. hyæna, Lat.]
HYE'NA, hi-ê'nâ. } An animal like a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like an hyen, when you are inclined to sleep. Shakspeare.

A wonder more amazing would we find,
Th' hyena shews it, of a double kind;
Varying the sexes in alternate years,
In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the bever, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the hyena odorata, or civet cat. Brown.

The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson.

HYGRO'METER, hi-grôm'mè-tûr.[187] n. s. [ὑγρὸς and μετρέω; hygrometre, French.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river. Arbuthnot.

HY'GROSCOPE, hi'grò-skòpe. n. s. [ὑγρὸς and σκοπέω; hygroscope, French.] An instrument to show the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme. Quincy.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes. Arbuthnot.

HYLA'RCHICAL, hi-lâr'kè-kâl. adj. [ὕλη and ἀρχη.] Presiding over matter.

HYM, hîm. n. s. A species of dog: unless it is by mistake for lym.

Avaunt, you curs!
Mastiff, greyhound, mungril grim,
Hound or spaniel, brache or hym;
Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail,
Tom will make him weep and wail. Shaksp.

HY'MEN, hi'mên. n. s. [ὑμὴν.]

1. The god of marriage.
2. The virginal membrane.

HYMENE'AL, hi-mè-nè'âl. } n. s. [ὑμέναιος.]
HYMENE'AN, hi-mè-nè'ân. } A marriage song.

And heav'nly choirs the hymenean sung. Milton.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;
For her white virgins hymeneals sing. Pope.

HYMENE'AL, hi-mè-nè'âl. } adj. Pertaining to marriage.
HYMENE'AN, hi-mè-nè'ân. }

The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice,
A signal of her hymeneal choice. Pope's Odyssey.

HYMN, hîm. n. s. [hymne, Fr. ὑμνος.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superiour being.

As I earst, in praise of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I eke should frame. Spenser.

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;
Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried corse. Shaksp.

When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made
An overture for the wars. Shaksp.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah, and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.

Farewell, you happy shades,
Where angels first should practise hymns, and string
Their tuneful harps, when they to Heav'n would sing. Dryden.

To HYMN, hîm. v. a. [ὑμνέω.] To praise in song; to worship in hymns.

Whose business were to serve the Lord
High up in heav'n, with songs to hymn his throne. Milton.

To HYMN, hîm. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.

He had not left alive this patient saint,
This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence,
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryden.

HY'MNICK, hîm'nik. adj. [ὑμνος.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

To HYP, hîp. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hypped since I saw you. Spectator.

HY'PALLAGE, hè-pâl'lâ-jè. n. s. [ὑπαλλαγη.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HY'PER, hi'pûr. n. s. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,
And hypers upon them again. Prior.

HYPE'RBOLA, hi-pêr'bò-lâ.[187] n. s. [hyperbole, French; ὑπερ and βάλλω.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentrick. Bentley.

HY'PERBOLE, hi-pêr'bò-lè.[187] n. s. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολη.] A figure in rhetorick by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, He runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shaksp.

Terms unsquar'd
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shaksp.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shaksp.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Glanville.

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight. Granville.

The common people understand raillery, or at least rhetorick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift.

HYPERBO'LICAL, hi-pêr-bôl'lè-kâl. } adj.
HYPERBO'LICK, hi-pêr-bôl'ik. } [hyperbolique, Fr. from hyperbola, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancellated in the middle with squares, with triangles before and behind with hyperbolick lines. Grew.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray.

2. [from hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense. Boyle.

HYPERBO'LICALLY, hi-pêr-bôl'lè-kâl-le.[509] adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically. Brown.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible. Broome.

HYPERBO'LIFORM, hi-pĕr-bŏl'lĕ-fôrm. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBO'REAN, hi-pĕr-bŏ'rĕ-ân. n. s. [hyperboréen, French; hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

HYPERCRI'TICK, hi-pĕr-krĭt'ĭk. n. s. [hypercritique, French; ὕπερ and κριτικος.] A critick exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages. Dryden.

HYPERCRI'TICAL, hi-pĕr-krĭt'ĕ-kâl. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctilios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to. Evelyn.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner. Swift.

HYPE'RMETER, hi-pĕr'mĕ-tûr. n. s. [υπερ and μέτρον.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club. Addison.

HYPERSARCO'SIS, hi-pĕr-sâr-kŏ'sĭs.[520] n. s. [ὑπερσάρκωσις, ὕπερ and σαρκος.] The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the hypersarcosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction. Wiseman.

HY'PHEN, hi'fĕn. n. s. [ὑφὲν.] A note of conjunction: as, vir-tue, ever-living.

HYPNO'TICK, hĭp-nŏt'ĭk. n. s. [υπνος.] Any medicine that induces sleep.

HYPOCHO'NDRES, hĭp-ŏ-kŏn'drz.[415] n. s. [hypocondre, French; ὑποχονδριον.] The two regions lying on each side the cartilago ensiformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen. Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produces various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Arbuthnot.

HYPOCHONDRI'ACAL, hĭp-pŏ-kŏn-drī'â-kâl.
HYPOCHONDRI'ACK, hĭp-pŏ-kŏn'drē-ăk. adj. [hypocondriaque, French; from hypochondres.]

1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he 's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety.

2. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon.

HY'POCIST, hĭp'ŏ-sĭst. n. s. [ὑποκιστις; hypociste, French.] An inspissated juice considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. The stem of the plant is thick and fleshy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe: the juice is expressed, then formed into cakes. Hill.

HYPO'CRISY, hĕ-pŏk'krē-sē.[187] n. s. [hypocrisie, French; υποκρισις.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal; nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint; men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HY'POCRITE, hĭp'pŏ-krĭt. n. s. [hypocrite, French; υποκριτὴς.]

1. A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shaksp.

A wise man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecclus.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues you ask time to reign. Dryd.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

2. Dissembler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass
Suffices virtue; but may hypocrites,
Who slyly speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarn'd drink on,
And through intemp'rance grow a while sincere.
Philips.

HYPOCRI'TICAL, hĭp-pŏ-krĭt'ĭk-kâl. } adj.
HYPOCRI'TICK, hĭp-pŏ-krĭt'ĭk. } [from hypocrite.] Dissembling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others skrew their hypocritick face. Swift.

HYPOCRI'TICALLY, hĭp-pŏ-krĭt'ĭk-kâl-ē. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay, hypocritically, abusing at once their proselytes and their religion. Gov. of the Tongue.

HYPOGA'STRICK, hĭp-ŏ-gâs'trĭk. adj. [hypogastrique, French; ὕπο and γαστηρ.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wiseman.

HYPOGE'UM, hĭp-ŏ-gē'ŭm.[512] n. s. [ὕπο and γη.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPO'STASIS, hī-pŏs'tâ-sĭs.[187] n. s. [hypostase, French; υποστασις.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article. Hammond.

HYPOSTA'TICAL, hī-pŏ-stăt'ĕ-kâl. adj. [hypostatique, Fr. from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymist, touching their three hypostatical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Personal; distinctly personal.

HYPOTENU'SE, hī-pŏt'ĕ-nûse.[187] n. s. [hypotenuse, French; υποτείνουσα.] The line that subtends the right-angle of a right-angled triangle; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYPO'THESIS, hĭp-pŏ*th*'ĕ-sĭs, or hī-pŏ*th*'ĕ-sĭs.[187] n. s. [hypothese, French; υποθέσις.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole unintelligible. South.

With imagin'd sovereignty
Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns;
He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise:
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHE'TICAL, hī-pŏ-*th*ĕt'tĕ-kâl.[187] }
HYPOTHE'TICK, hī-pŏ-*th*ĕt'tĭk.[187] } adj. [hipothetique, French; from hypothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if: as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts.

HYPOTHE'TICALLY, hī-pŏ-*th*ĕt'tĕ-kâl-ē.[187] adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Broome.

HYRST, HURST, HERST, hûrst, are all from the Saxon hŷrꝑc, a wood or grove. Gibson.

HY'SSOP, hĭz'zŭp, or hī'sŭp. n. s. [hyssope, French; hyssopus, Latin.] A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in scripture. Miller.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYSTE'RICAL, hĭs-tĕr'rĕ-kâl. }
HYSTE'RICK, hĭs-tĕr'rĭk.[509] } adj. [hysterique, Fr. υστερικος.]

1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators. Harvey on Consumptions.

Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who gave th' hysterick or poetic fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbuthnot.

HYSTE'RICKS, his-tĕr'riks. n. s. [ὑστερικος.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

I, i. Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked with an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken frend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word is always expressed by y.

J consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant, as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.

I, i. pronoun personal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.

I, gen. me; plural we, gen. us.
ic me; pe, uꝑ.]

1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.

I do not like these several councils, I. Shaksp.
There is none greater in this house than I. Gen.
Be of good cheer, it is I: be not afraid. Mat.
What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make thy age to come my own;
I shall like beasts to common people dye,
Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.
Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.
When chance of business parts us two,
What do our souls, I wonder do? Cowley.
Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden.
Of night impatient we demand the day,
The day arrives, and for the night we pray.
Blackmore.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can have, and that is me. Clarissa.

3. I is more than once in Shakspeare written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shaksp.
Did your letters pierce the queen;
—I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down.
Shakspeare.

To JA'BBER, jâb'bûr.[98] v. n. [gabberen, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties. Swift.

JA'BBERER, jâb'bûr-ûr. n. s. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out cant the Babylonian labourers
At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras.

JA'CENT, jâ'sênt. adj. [jacens, Lat.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the jacent posture. Wotton.

JA'CINTH, jâ'sinth. n. s. [for hyacinth, Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]

1. The same with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep reddish yellow, approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward.

JACK, jâk. n. s. [probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or paltry fellows.

I am in estimation:
You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot
Office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakspeare.
I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise. Shakspeare.
Every Jack slave has his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that no body can match. Shakspeare.

2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy: as, an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters' boots, but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; and that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Moxon.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkins.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wiseman.

Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks
Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks.
Pope.

4. A young pike.

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer.

5. [jacque, French.] A coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, which stinks of the borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and fourpence. Arbuthnot.

10. A support to saw wood on. Ainsw.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship. Ainsworth.

12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing, as in the following phrase.

Jack of all trades, show and sound;
An inverse burse, an exchange under ground.
Cleaveland.

JACK Boots, jâk-bôôts'. n. s. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a commode and a night-rail. Spectator.

JACK by the hedge, jâk'bi-thĕ-hĕdje. n. s. [erysimum.] An herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other sallads are, and much used in broth. Mortimer.

JACK Pudding, jâk-pûd'ding. n. s. [jack and pudding.] A zany; a merry Andrew.

Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estrange.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean pottage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding, in his party-coloured jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.

JACK with a Lantern, jâk'with-â-lân'tûrn. An ignis fatuus.

JACKA'L, jâk'kâll.[408] n. s. [chacal, Fr.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our sterns they send;
Close by their fireships, like jackals appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.
The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arbuthnot.

JACKALE'NT, jåk-â-lênt'. n. s. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.

You little jackalent, have you been true to us?
—Ay, I'll be sworn. Shaksp.

JA'CKANAPES, jåk'ån-åps. n. s. [jack and ape.]

1. Monkey; an ape.
2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?
That jackanapes with scarfs. Shakspeare.
People wonder'd how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him. Arbuthnot.

JACKDA'W, jåk-dåw'. n. s. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Watts.

JA'CKET, jåk'kît.[99] n. s. [jacquet, Fr.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a cross of red. Hubberd.
And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
And here a sailor's jacket hangs to dry. Pope.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

She fell upon the jacket of the parson, who stood gaping at her. L'Estrange.

JA'COB's Ladder, jå'kûbz-låd'dûr. n. s. [polemonium.] The same with Greek valerian.

JACTITA'TION, jåk-tê-tå'shûn. n. s. [jactito, Latin.]

1. Tossing motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surprised with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harvey.

2. A term in the canon law for a false pretension to marriage.

JACULA'TION, jåk-ù-lå'shûn. n. s. [jaculatio, jaculor, Latin.] The act of throwing missive weapons.

So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

JADE, jåde. n. s. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!
I am as dull as winter-starved sheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overloaden cart. Sidney.
When they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the trial. Shakspeare.
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torchstaves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping their head and hips. Shakspeare.
So have I seen with armed heel,
A wight bestride a commonweal,
While still the more he kick'd and spurr'd,
The less the sullen jade has stirr'd. Hudibras.
The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport of him. L'Estrange.
False steps but help them to renew their race,
As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall these, these old jades, past the flower
Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman.
But she, the cunning'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney.
Get in, hussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern.
In di'monds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She shines the first of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman; in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.

JADE, jåde. n. s. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.

To JADE, jåde. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We 've jaded out o' the field. Shakspeare.
It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.
If fleet dragon's progeny at last
Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden.
The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.
There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; and upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade, to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility. Shakspeare.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood
Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shaksp.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shakspeare.

To JADE, jåde. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South.

JA'DISH, jå'dîsh. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious; bad, as a horse.

That hors'd us on their backs, to shew us
A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras.
When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe. Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman: for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAGG, jåg. v. a. [gagaw, slits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon.
The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak leaves; but they never have any small plain purls. Bacon.
The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley.
An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAGG, jåg. n. s. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.
Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer.

JA'GGY, jåg'gè. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;
His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.
Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind. Thomson.

JA'GGEDNESS, jåg'gêd-nês.[366] n. s. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacham.

JAIL, jåle.[52 202 212] n. s. [geol, Fr.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakspeare.
A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.
He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.
One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

JA'ILBIRD, jåle'bûrd. n. s. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JA'ILER, jå'lûr. n. s. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.
This is as a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspeare.
His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let them reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden.
Palamon, the pris'ner knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light:
And, with his jailer's leave, desired to breathe
An air more welcome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES, jåks. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.

I will tread this inbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shaksp.
Their sordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden.
Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JA'LAP, jâl'lûp. n. s. [jalap, Fr. jalapium, low Lat.] A medicinal drug.

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative where serous humours are to be evacuated. Hill.

JAM, jâm. n. s. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB, jâm.[347] n. s. [jambe, French, a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the foreside of the chimney jambs. Moxon.

IA'MBICK, i-âm'bîk. n. s. [iambique, Fr. iambicus, Lat.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To JA'NGLE, jâng'gl.[405] v. n. [jangler, Fr. Skinner.] To altercate; to quarrel; to bicker in words. A low word.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his book-men. Shaksp.

So far am I glad it did so sort,
And this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shaksp.

There is no errour which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

To JA'NGLE, jâng'gl.[405] v. a. To make to sound untuneably.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh.
Shakspeare.

Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes
Had jangled their fantastick chimes. Prior.

JA'NGLER, jâng'gl-ûr. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

JA'NIZARY, jân'nè-zâr-è. n. s. [a Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizir, presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the west,
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

JA'NNOCK, jân'nûk. n. s. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

JA'NTY, jân'tè.[214] adj. [corrupted from gentil, Fr.] Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is a janty slattern: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Spectator.

JA'NUARY, jân'nû-âr-è. n. s. [Januarius, Lat.] The first month of the year, from Janus to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying Providence. Peacham.

JAPA'N, jâ-pân'. n. s. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

To JA'PAN, jâ-pân'. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japann'd avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire
Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
And aids with soot the new japanning art. Gay.

JAPA'NNER, jâ-pân'nûr. n. s. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.
2. A shoeblacker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes. Pope.

To JAR, jâr.[78] v. n. [from ϸorre, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonick, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryd.
My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably and irregularly.

O, you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father! Shaksp.

I perceive you delight not in music.
—Not a whit, when it jars so. Shaksp.

A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Roscom.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And ev'ry passion aptly harmoniz'd,
Amid a jarring world. Thomson.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree.
Shaksp.

For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton.

Venalus concluded his report:
A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Roars horrible. Dryden.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride among themselves did jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar.
Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden.

JAR, jâr. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stifly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder.

2. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miserable men, that to him subject are! F. Queen.

Nath'less, my brother, since we passed are
Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Hubberd

Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice presides,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too.
Shaksp.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t' other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

JA'RDES, jâr'dêz. n. s. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. F. Dict.

JA'RGON, jâr'gûn.[166] n. s. [jargon, Fr. gericonca, Span.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration; yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramhall.

From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shows
That all his predecessors' rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JA'RGONELLE, jâr-gò-nêl'. n. s. A species of pear. See PEAR.

JA'SHAWK, jâs'hâwk. n. s. [probably ias or eyas hawk.] A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JA'SMINE, jâz'mîn.[434] n. s. [gelseminum; jasmin, Fr. It is often pronounced jessamine.] A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander.
Thomson.

JA'SMINE Persian, jâz'mîn-pêr'zhûn. n. s. A plant. A species of lilach.

JA'SPER, jâs'pûr.[98] n. s. [jaspe, French; iaspis, Lat.] A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China. Hill.

The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow and white. Woodward.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison.

IATROLE'PTICK, i-â-trò-lîp'tîk. adj. [iatroleptique, Fr. ἰατρος and ἀλείφω.] That cures by anointing.

To JA'VEL, or jable, jâv'vîl. v. a. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling.

This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JA'VEL, jâv'vîl. n. s. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering or dirty fellow.

When as time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that those two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels.
Hubberd.

Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution; put on his best apparel, which the lieutenant compelled him to put off again, saying, That he who should have them was but a javel. What, says sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit? More.

JA'VELIN, jâv'lîn. n. s. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milt.
She shakes her myrtle jav'lin, and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden.
Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addis.

JA'UNDICE, jân'dîs.[142] [214] n. s. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, French.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straiten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus, as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick; to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shaksp.
Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,
Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.
The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinctured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearance of things. Watts.

JA'UNDICED, jân'dîst.[359] adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT, jânt.[214] v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke.
Shaksp.

JAUNT, jânt. n. s. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd sore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.
He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the night to haunt. Hudibras.
They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Estrange.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden.
Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part I have run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out those metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.

JA'UNTINESS, jân'tê-nês. n. s. [from jaunty, or janty, corrupted from gentil, Fr. See JANTY.] Airiness; flutter; genteelness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntiness of air I was once master of. Addison.

JAW, jâw.[219] n. s. [joue, a cheek, French; whence joowbone, or cheekbone, then jaw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor. Proverbs.
The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinable. Walton.
Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, saith that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immoveable. Grew.
More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. Psalms.
My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws. Shaksp.
A smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame. Rowe.

JAY, jâ.[220] n. s. [named from his cry. Skinner.] A bird; piaglandaria.

Two sharp winged sheers,
Deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Fairy Queen.
We 'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpion—we 'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shaksp.
What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shaksp.
I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.
Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when philomela sings. Pope.

JA'ZEL, jâ'zêl. n. s. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. Dict.

ICE, îse. n. s. [ɪr, Sax. eyse, Dut.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Shaksp.
Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shaksp.
If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ICE. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Atchieve the elder, set the younger free
For our access, whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not so graceless be to be ingrate. Shaksp.
Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Peacham.
After he 'd a while look'd wise,
At last broke silence and the ice. Hudibras.

To ICE, îse. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.
2. To cover with concreted sugar.

2. Good against the jaundice.

I'CY, ī'sē. adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; made of ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee. Shakspeare.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind. Shaksp.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her cross display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou would'st have never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect. Shaksp.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shaksp.

I'D, īde. Contracted for I would.

IDE'A, ī-dē'â. n. s. [idée, French; ἰδέα.] Mental image.

Whatsoever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought or understanding, that I call idea. Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea. Watts.

Happy you that may to the saint, your only idea,
Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter. Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven. Hooker.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts. Fairfax.

I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind. Shaksp.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea! Milton.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he set. Dryden.

IDE'AL, ī-dē'âl. adj. [from idea.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; one real, when the thing, and real impression of things on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination. Cheyne.

IDE'ALLY, ī-dē'âl-ē. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown.

The beard 's th' identic beard you knew,
The same numerically true. Hudibras.

There majus is identical with magis. Hale.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotson.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley.

IDE'NTITY, ī-dĕn'tē-tē. n. s. [identité, Fr. identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water. Brown.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with it self-existing, at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

By cutting off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhime to the next following, is produced too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES, īdz. n. s. [ides, French; idus, Latin.] A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Romish calendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July, and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days.

IDIO'CRASY, ĭd-ē-ŏk'krâ-sē.[518] n. s. [idiocrase, French, ἴδιος and κρᾶσις.] Peculiarity of constitution.

I'DIOCY, ĭd'ē-ō-sē. n. s. [ἰδιωτία.] Want of understanding.

I stand not upon their idiocy in thinking that horses did eat their bits. Bacon.

I'DIOM, ĭd'ē-ŭm.[166] n. s. [idiome, French; ἰδίωμα.] A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them: wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours. Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach,
And to just idioms fix our doubtful speech. Prior.

IDIOMA'TICAL, ĭd-ē-ō-măt'ē-kâl.[509] } adj.
IDIOMA'TICK, ĭd-ē-ō-măt'tĭk. }
[from idiom.] Peculiar to a tongue; phraseological.

Since phrases used in conversation contract meanness by passing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idiomatick ways of speaking. Spectator.

IDIO'PATHY, ĭd-ē-ŏp'pâ-thē.[518] n. s. [idiopathie, French; ἴδιος and πάθος.] A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Quincy.

Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same. Brown.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies as well as other faculties. Glanville.

I'DIOT, ĭd'ē-ŭt.[166] n. s. [idiote, Fr. idiota, Latin; ἰδιώτης.] A fool; a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reason.

Life is a tale,
Told by an ideot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing. Shakspeare.

What else doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble suppliants that he holds them ideots, or base wretches, not able to get relief? Raleigh.

By idle boys and ideots vilify'd,
Who me and my calamities deride. Sandys.

Many ideots will believe that they see what they only hear. Dennis.

I'DIOTISM, ĭd'ē-ŭt-ĭzm. n. s. [idiotisme, French; ἰδιωτισμός.]

1. Peculiarity of expression; mode of expression peculiar to a language.

Scholars sometimes in common speech, or writing, in their native language, give terminations and idiotisms suitable to their native language unto words newly invented. Hale.

2. Folly; natural imbecility of mind.

I'DLE, ī'dl.[405] adj. [ydel, Saxon.]

1. Lazy; averse from labour.

For shame! so much to do, and yet idle. Bull.

2. Not engaged; affording leisure.

For often have you writ to her; and she in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shakspeare.

3. Unactive; not employed.

No war or battle's sound
Was heard the world around,
The idle spear and shield were high up hung. Milton.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that in a tempest will rather perish than work; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

They astonish'd, all resistance lost,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then
The power that guards the sacred lives of kings?
Why slept the lightnings and the thunderbolts,
Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees,
When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden.

5. Unfruitful; barren; not productive of good.

Of antres vast, and desarts idle,
It was my bent to speak. Shaksp.

The murmuring surge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. Shaksp.

He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shaksp.

6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thine idle offers I refuse;
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cause to use? F. Queen.

This answer is both idle in regard of us, and repugnant to themselves. Hooker.

They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.

An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.

He wishes to recal the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions. Rogers.

To I'DLE, ī'dl. v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.

Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she, and all her fellow-gods,
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.

IDLEHE'ADED, ī'dl-hĕd-dĕd. adj. [idle and head.]

1. Foolish; unreasonable.

These idleheaded seekers resort thither. Carew.

2. Delirious; infatuated.

Upon this loss she fell idleheaded, and to this very day stands near the place still. L'Estrange.

I'DLENESS, ī'dl-nĕs. n. s. [from idle.]

1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.

Nor is excess the only thing by which sin breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness; and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South.

2. Absence of employment.

All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for spite, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

He, fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercised his happy skill. Dryden.

Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.

3. Omission of business.

Ten thousand harms more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shaksp.

4. Unimportance; trivialness.

To the English court assemble now,
From ev'ry region, apes of idleness. Shaksp.

5. Inefficacy; uselessness.

6. Barrenness; worthlessness.

I'DLER, ī'dl-ûr.[98] n. s. [from idle.] A lazy person; a sluggard.

Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service, as that they know not the name of a rope. Raleigh.

Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave! Irene.

I'DLY, ī'dl-ē. adv. [from idle.]

1. Lazily; without employment.

I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shaksp.

2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.

And modern Asgil, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.

3. Carelessly; without attention.

But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.

4. Ineffectually; vainly.

Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.

I'DOL, ī'dŭl.[37 166] n. s. [idole, Fr. εἴδωλον; idolum, Latin.]

1. An image worshipped as God.

They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac.

A nation from one faithful man to spring,
Him on this side Euphrates yet residing,
Bred up in idol worship. Milton.

The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.

2. A counterfeit.

Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zechariah.

3. An image.

Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.

4. A representation. Not in use.

Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. F. Q.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.

He 's honoured and lov'd by all:
The soldier's god, and people's idol. Denham.

IDO'LATER, ī-dŏl'lā-tûr.[98] n. s. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Lat.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable; first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.

An astrologer may be no christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bently.

To IDO'LATRIZE, ī-dŏl'lā-trize v. a. [from idolater.] To worship idols. Ainsworth.

IDO'LATROUS, ī-dŏl'lā-trŭs.[314] adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.

Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Peacham.

IDO'LATROUSLY, ī-dŏl'lā-trŭs-lē. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.

Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.

IDO'LATRY, ī-dŏl'lā-trē. n. s. [idolatrie, French; idolatria, Latin.] The worship of images, the worship of any thing as God which is not God.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead. Shak.

Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances. South.

The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison.

I'DOLIST, ī'dŭl-ĭst.[166] n. s. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.

I to God have brought
Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolist and atheist. Milton.

To I'DOLIZE, ī'dŏ-lize. v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.

Those who are generous, humble, just, and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize. Denh.

Parties, with the greatest violation of christian unity, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.

IDO'NEOUS, ī-dō'nē-ŭs. adj. [idoneus, Lat.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.

You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.

An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure et facto, and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person. Ayliffe.

I'DYL, ī'dĭl. n. s. [εἰδυλλιον; idyllium, Lat.] A small short poem.

I. E. ĭd-ĕst. for id est, or, that is.

That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Locke.

JE'ALOUS, jĕl'lŭs.[234 314] adj. [jaloux, Fr.]

1. Suspicious in love.

To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shaksp.

Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure;
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self bounty, be abus'd: look to 't. Shaksp.

Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband. Shakspeare.

A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryden.

2. Emulous; full of competition.

I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.

I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts. 1 Kings.

4. Suspiciously vigilant.

I am jealous over you with godly jealousy. 2 Corinthians.

His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it, or his restless and mutinous humour transported him. Clarendon.

5. Suspiciously careful.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon.

They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar
Protesting fate supreme. Milton.

How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other men's? Decay of Piety.

6. Suspiciously fearful.

'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys your peace. Waller.

While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

JE'ALOUSLY, jĕl'lŭs-lē. adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.

JE'ALOUSNESS, jĕl'lŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.

Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. K. Charles.

1. Suspicion in love.

But gnawing jealousy, out of their sight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Fairy Q.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair,
And shudd'ring fear, and green-ey'd jealousy!
O love, be moderate; allay thine extasy. Shaksp.

Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needless jealousy. Shakspeare.

Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.

2. Suspicious fear.

The obstinacy in Essex in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands he would take revenge upon him. Clarendon.

3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.

To JEER, jēēr.[246] v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.

The merry world did on a day,
With his train bands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomly jests, loud talking and jeering, which are called indecencies, and incivilities. Taylor.

To Jeer, jēēr. v. a. To treat with scoffs.

The Spanish king presents a jennet,
To shew his love. Prior.

To Je'opard, jĕp'pûrd.[256] v. a. [See Jeopardy.] To hazard; to put in danger. Obsolete.

He had been accused of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 2 Mac.

Je'opardous, jĕp'pûr-dûs. adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.

JE'OPARDY, jĕp'pûr-dė. n. s. [This word is supposed to be derived from j' ai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner and Junius.] Hazard; danger; peril. Not in use.

And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventure's chanceful jeopardy. Hubbard.

Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shakspeare.

We may impute to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.

To Jerk, jĕrk. v. a. [ȝeꝑeccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written yerk.

I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service; nine or ten times
I thought to 've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakspeare.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a-working. Swift.

To Jerk, jĕrk. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet,
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

Jerk, jĕrk. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.

Contemn the silly taunts of fleering boffoonry; and the jerks of that wit that is but a kind of confident folly. Glanville.

Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben Jonson.

Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks, or springs reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

Je'rkin, jĕr'kĭn.[103] n. s. [cyꝑtelkin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.

A man may wear it on both sides like a leather jerkin. Shaksp.

Unless you should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us wool? Moore.

Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South.

Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a firking. Hudibras.

I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliv. Trav.

Je'rkin, jĕr'kĭn. n. s. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth. This should be written gyrkin.

Je'rsey, jĕr'zė. n. s. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.

Jeru'salem Artichoke, jė-rōō-să-lĕm-ăr'tė-tshōk. n. s. Sunflower, of which it is a species.

Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small offsets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer.

Jess, jĕs. n. s. [gecte, French; getto, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hanmer.

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jesses were her dear heart strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shaksp.

Je'ssamine, jĕs'să-mĭn.[150] n. s. [See Jasmine.] A fragant flower.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines. Spenser.

To Jest, jĕst. v. n. [jesticulor, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or action.

Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced. Ecclus.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on: but I do not like these several councils. Shaksp.

Jest, jĕst. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shaksp.

As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Tillotson.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.

When you the dullest of dull things have said,
And then ask pardon for the jest you made. Young.

2. The object of jests; a laughingstock.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shaksp.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned; not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shaksp.

When his playfellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew.

JES'TER, jés'tûr.[93] n. s. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled and soon burnt. Shaksp.

2. One given to sarcasm.

Now as a jester I accost you,
Which never yet one friend hath lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon: jackpudding. A jester, or licensed scoffer, was kept at court to the time of Charles the first.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser.

JET, jét. n. s. [ȝagat, Sax. get, Dutch; gagates, Lat.]

1. A beautiful fossil, of a firm and even structure, and a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay; of a fine deep black, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is confounded with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shaksp.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shaksp.

The bottom clear
Now laid with many a fet,
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

One of us in glass is set,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,
The neck slight shaded. Thomson.

2. [jet, French.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end.
Blackmore.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock.
Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes,
Or pullet dare walk in their jet? Tusser.

To JET, jét. v. n. [jetter, Fr.]

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shaksp.

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.

Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shaksp.

3. To jolt; to be shaken.

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wiseman.

JE'TSAM, jét'sûm. } n. s. [jetter, French.]
JE'TSON, jét'sûn. }

Goods or other things which, having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bailey.

JE'TTY, jét'tè. adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.

2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black. Brown.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd.
Prior.

Nigrina black, and Merdamante brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow'rs below. Pope.

JE'WEL, jû'îl.[99] n. s. [joyaux, French; jeweelen, Dutch.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture.
Shakspeare.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.
Shakspeare.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.

2. A precious stone; a gem.

Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shaks.

Proud fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewell to your sisters
—Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shaksp.

JE'WEL-HOUSE, or Office, jû'îl-hôûse. n. s. The place where the regal ornaments are reposited.

The king has made him master of the jewelhouse.
Shakspeare.

JE'WELLER, jû'îl-ûr.[98] n. s. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsick worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.

JEWS-EAR, jûze'êêr. n. s. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees decaying. The common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill.

An herb called jews-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elders, and sometimes ashes: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon.

JEWS-HARP, jûze'hârp. n. s. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring of iron, which being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

JEWS-MALLOW, jûze-mâl'lô. n. s. [corchorus, Latin.] Ranwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a potherb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEWS-STONE, jûze'stône. n. s. The clavated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering; about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter; ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky reddishness. It is found in Syria. Hill's Mat. Med.

IF, îf. conjunction. [ȝif, Saxon.]

1. Suppose it be so, or it were so that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs or ands. Hooker.

If that rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these nobles lords,
Had not been here. Shaksp.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
—If! talk'st thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor.
Shakspeare.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, Malbranche makes a proof that they are present to our minds: and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This infallibility upon supposition, amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

All of them supposed the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxims to be good; if so he there were no resurrection. Atterbury.

Tisiphone, that oft hast heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury or chance;
But by this easy rise they all advance. Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't—it may be—and it must;
To which of these must Alma trust?
Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if she doubts or no. Prior.

3. Allowing that; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

I'GNEOUS, îg'nè-ûs. adj. [igneus, Latin.] Fiery; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions.
Glanville.

IGNI'POTENT, îg-nîp'pò-tênt.[518] adj. [ignis and potens, Latin.] Presiding over fire.

Vulcan is called the pow'r ignipotent. Pope.

IGNIS FATUUS, ig'nis-fât'shû-ûs. n. s. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern.

Vapours arising from putrified waters are usually called ignes fatui. Newton.

To I'GNITE, îg-nite'. v. a. [from ignis, fire, Latin.] To kindle; to set on fire. A chymical term.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew.

IGNI'TION, îg-nîsh'ûn. n. s. [ignition, Fr. from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNI'TIBLE, ig-ni'tè-bl. adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire. Not in use.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur or ignitible parts. Brown.

Vulcanos and ignivomous mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe. Derham.

IGNO'BLE, ig-nò'bl. adj. [ignoble, Fr. ignobilis, Latin.]

1. Mean of birth; not noble, not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd,
Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shaksp.

IGNO'BLY, ig-nò'blè. adv. [from ignoble.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly! Milton.

Here, over-match'd in fight in heaps they lie:
There scatter'd o'er the field ignobly fly. Dryden.

IGNOMI'NIOUS, ig-nò-min'yûs. adj. [ignominieux, French; ignominiosus, Latin.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonourable. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpriz'd,
Fled ignominious. Milton.

Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,
And tortur'd, 'scaped this ignominious fate. Dryd.

They gave, and she transferr'd the curst advice,
That monarchs should their inward soul disguise;
By ignominious arts, for servile ends,
Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends. Prior.

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single, rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector. Swift.

IGNOMI'NIOUSLY, ig-nò-min'yûs-lè. adv. from ignominious.] Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some allay to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South.

I'GNOMINY, ig'nò-min-è. n. s. [ignominie, French; ignominia, Latin.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heavn'n:
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shaks.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNORA'MUS, ig-nò-rà'mûs. n. s. [Lat.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impannelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as defective, or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther inquiry upon that party for that fault is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Cowell.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain uninstructed pretender. A low word.

Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world, and he shall readily admit the commendation. South.

I'GNORANCE, ig'nò-rânse. n. s. [ignorance, French; ignoratio, Latin.]

1. Want of knowledge; unlearnedness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakspeare.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows. Shaksp.

If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?
From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise! Prior.

2. Want of knowledge respecting some particular thing.

It is in every body's power to pretend ignorance of the law. Sherlock.

3. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. Common Prayer.

Punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tobit.

I'GNORANT, ig'nò-rânt. adj. [ignorant, French; ignorans, Latin.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unenlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Psalms.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ign'rant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shaksp.

In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shaksp.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson.

Fools grant whate'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered. This is merely poetical.

If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge
Thereof to be informed, imprison 't not
In ignorant concealment. Shaksp.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.

Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I
Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.

Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done. Unusual.

His shipping,
Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakspeare.

I'GNORANT, ig'nò-rânt. n. s. One untaught, unlettered, uninstructed.

Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorants to preach! Denham.

I'GNORANTLY, ig'nò-rânt-lè. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskilfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save. Dryd.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.

To IGNO'RE, ig-nòre'. v. a. [ignorer, Fr. ignoro, Latin.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.

I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern criticks to divers texts, by me alledged. Boyle.

Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.

IGNO'SCIBLE, ig-nòs'sè-bl. adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.] Capable of pardon. Dict.

JIG, jig. n. s. [giga, Italian; geige, Teutonick, a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike musick, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser.

As fiddlers still,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will
Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne.

Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig-given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. Ben Jonson.

All the swains that there abide,
With jigs and rural dance resort. Milton.

The muses blush'd to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting. Fenton.

They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminster-hall. Arbuthnot.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.

To JIG, jig. v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelesly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.

As for the jigging part and figures of dances,
I count that little. Locke.

JI'G-MAKER, jig'mà-kûr. n. s. [jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry. Shakspeare.

He rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudibras.

JILT, jilt. n. s. [gilia, Islandick, to entrap in an amour, Mr. Lye. Perhaps from giglot, by contraction; or gillet, or gillot, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name of a woman. It is also called jillet in Scotland.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.

Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Otway.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

When love was all an easy monarch's care,

Jilts rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ. Pope.

To JILT, jilt. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

To JILT, jilt. v. n. To play the jilt; to practise amorous deceits.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,
Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

To JI'NGLE, jĭng'gl. v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed.] To clink; to sound with a kind of sharp rattle.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shakspeare.

With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awaked. Shakspeare.

The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

JI'NGLE, jĭng'gl.[405] n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any clink, or sharp rattle.
2. It is used, I think, improperly, to express the correspondence of sound in the effects of rhyme.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden.

3. Any thing sounding; a rattle; a bell.

If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon.

ILE, īle. n. s. [corrupted from aisle, Fr.] A walk or alley in a church or publick building. Properly aile.

Upward the columns shoot, the roots ascend,
And arches widen, and long iles extend. Pope.

ILE, īle. n. s. [aisle, French.] An ear of corn. Ainsworth.

I'LEX, ĭ'lĕks. n. s. [Latin.]

The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a sort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chambletted, as if it were painted. Mortimer.

I'LIAC, ĭl'ē-ăk. adj. [iliacus, Latin.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

I'LIAC Passion, ĭl'ē-ăk-păsh'ŭn. A kind of nervous colick, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above: whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellie s much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.

ILK' ĭlk. adv. [ealc, Saxon.] The same. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each; as, ilk ane of you, every one of you. It also signifies, the same; as, Macintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same; as, Macintosh of Macintosh.

Shepherds, should it not yshend
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse. Spenser.

ILL, ĭl. adj. [contracted from EVIL, and retaining all its senses.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.

There some ill planet reigns;
I must be patient, 'till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Shaksp.

Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example. Shakspeare.

Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill seat; but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours. Bacon.

Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed; others, of a jovial nature, incline them to be merry. Bacon.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.

You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am on the sudden something ill. Shaksp.

I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governours falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.

ILL, ĭl. n. s.

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
But are compell'd to avarice alone:
For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryd.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all sense of others ills escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate.

Though plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;
When prest by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;
And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Philips.

ILL, ĭl. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.

Ill at ease, both she and all her train
The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.

2. Not easily; with pain; with difficulty.

Thou desir'st
The punishment all on thyself! alas!
Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain
His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
And my displeasure bear'st so ill. Milton.

Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
When just approaching to the nuptial state. Dryd.

ILL, ĭl. substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood, by the following examples.

ILL, ĭl. substantive.

Dangerous conjectures in ill breeding minds. Shakspeare.

I have an ill divining soul:
Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shaksp.

No look, no last adieu before he went!
In an ill boding hour to slaughter sent. Dryden.

I know
The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound. Philips.

The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift.

Your ill meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who threat'ning cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me and tell to them my secret. Milton.

A spy distinguish'd from his airy stand,
To bribe whose vigilance, Ægisthus told
A mighty sum of ill persuading gold. Pope.

ILL, ĭl. adverb.

There sounded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisdom.

My colleague,
Being so ill affected with the gout,
Will not be able to be there in person. B. Jonson.

The examples
Of every minute's instance, present now,
Have put us in these ill beseeming arms. Shaksp.

Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:
I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryd.

We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And ev'ry saucy ill bred fellow
Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.

The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her. Sidney.

Envy, how does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned?
It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits. Collier.

There grows,
In my most ill compos'd affection such
A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shaksp.

To what end this ill concerted lye,
Palpable and gross? Dryden.

Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Addison.

The second daughter was a peevish, forward, ill conditioned creature as ever was. Arbuthnot.

No Persian arras hides his homely walls
With antick vests, which, through their shady fold,
Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryden.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill ey'd unto you. Shakspeare.

I see thy sister's tears,
Thy father's anguish; and thy brother's death,
In the pursuit of our ill fated loves. Addison.

Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
Their tedious life. Prior.

Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.

Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.

Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknightly errand. Sidney.

If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

I was at her house the hour she appointed.
——And you sped, sir?
——Very ill favouredly. Shakspeare.

They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mishaped productions. Locke.

The fabled dragon never guarded more
The golden fleece, than he his ill got store. Dryd.

Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill gotten power,
By shelt'ring men much better than himself. Addison.

Ill govern'd passions in a prince's breast,
Hazard his private, and the public rest. Waller.

That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Dryden.

Ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walsh.

Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
First from the ancient world these giants came. Milton.

Nor has he erred above once by ill judged superfluity. Garth.

Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? L'Estrange.

The match had been so ill made for Plexirtus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fifty to his defence. Sidney.

These are the product
Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
Where good with bad were match'd. Milton.

The works are weak, the garrison but thin,
Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryd.

He will not hear me out!
Was ever criminal forbid to plead?
Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.

It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaricious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cottager, in any bargain for tythes. Swift.

Soon as the ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe the amazement in his face! Dryden.

The eternal law of things must not be altered, to comply with his ill ordered choice. Locke.

When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.

For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the public scorn. Dryden.

There motley images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and similies unlike. Pope.

Sparta has not to boast of such a woman:
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.

I shall direct you a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts intentive on the bridal day. Pope.

Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain. Dryden.

The god inform'd
This ill shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden.

There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sorted: whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill sounding names. Ayliffe.

Ill spirited Wor'ster, did we not send grace,
Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shaksp.

From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove
An useless sorrow, and an ill star'd love. Prior.

Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:
Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief,
For death unfinish'd, and ill tim'd relief,
Stood sullen to her suit. Dryden.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.

That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their playfellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

IL, îl. before words beginning with l, stands for in.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L'Estrange.

Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke.

ILLU'STRATIVE, îl-lûs'trâ-tîv. adj. [from illustrate.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people. Brown.

ILLU'STRATIVELY, îl-lûs'trâ-tîv-lê. adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action. Brown.

ILLU'STRIOUS, îl-lûs'trê-ûs.[314] adj. [illustris, Latin; illustre, French.] Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred. South.

Of ev'ry nation, each illustrious name,
Such toys as those have cheated into fame. Dryden.

ILLU'STRIOUSLY, îl-lûs'trê-ûs-lê. adv. [from illustrious.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He disdained not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest his charity. Atterbury.

You carrying with you all the world can boast,
To all the world illustriously are lost. Pope.

ILLU'STRIOUSNESS, îl-lûs'trê-ûs-nês. n. s. [from illustrious.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.

I'M, îme. Contracted from I am.

IM, îm. is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters. What is im in Latin, when it is not negative, is often em in French; and our writers, as the Latin or French occurs to their minds, use im or em: formerly im was more common, and now em seems to prevail.

I'MAGE, îm'mîdje.[90] n. s. [image, Fr. imago, Lat.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and superscription? Matt.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, evermore talking. Shaksp.

Thy brother I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shaksp.

The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South.

Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of images. Dryden.

2. An idol; a false god.

Manasseh set the carved image in God's house. Chronicles.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may'st thou live,
To bear his image and renew his glories! Shaksp.

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:
But now two mirrours of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shaksp.

He made us to his image all agree:
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.

Deny to speak with me? They 're sick, they 're weary,
They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shaksp.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shaksp.

The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears. Dryd.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

The image of the jest,
I'll shew you here at large. Shaksp.

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.

When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.

To I'MAGE, îm'mîdje. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.

How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

Image to thy mind,
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades
Went quick. Philips.

His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.

Fate some future bard shall join,
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condem'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

I'MAGERY, îm'mîd-jêr-rê. n. s. [from image.]

1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.

Of marble stone was cut
An altar carv'd with cunning imagery. F. Queen.

When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings portraitures, and imagery,
Where every figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden.

Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden.

2. Show; appearance.

Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior.

All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.

3. Forms of the fancy; false ideas: imaginary phantasms.

It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.

I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMA'GINABLE, ê-mâd'jîn-â-bl. adj. [imaginable, French, from imagine.] Possible to be conceived.

It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South.

Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson.

IMA'GINANT, ê-mâd'jîn-ânt. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining; forming ideas.

We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMA'GINARY, ê-mâd'jîn-âr-ê. adj. [imaginaire, French, from imagine.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakspeare.

Expectation whirls me round:
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shakspeare.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison.

IMAGINA'TION, ê-mâd-jîn-â'shûn. n. s. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French; from imagine.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glanville.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly

The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton.
Where beams of warm imagination play;
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidney.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp.
Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shaksp.
His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lamentations.

4. An unsolid or fanciful opinion.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself, leads us. Locke.

IMA'GINATIVE, ĕ-mâd'jĭn-ā-tĭv.[513] adj. [imaginatif, Fr. from imagine.] Fantastic; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon.
Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

To IMA'GINE, ĕ-mâd'jĭn.[140] v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginor, Latin.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakspeare.
Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakspeare.
What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive.

They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Psalms.

IMA'GINER, ĕ-mâd'jĭn-ûr.[98] n. s. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon.

IMBE'CILE, ĭm-bĕs'sĭl. or ĭm-bĕ-sēēl'.[140 112] adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBE'CILE, ĭm-bĕs'sĭl. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expenses or unjust appropriations.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Taylor.

IMBECI'LITY, ĭm-bĕ-sĭl'lĕ-tē. n. s. [imbecillitié, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker.
No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.
We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.
That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.
Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shakspeare.
Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.
When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward.

To IMBI'BE, ĭm-bībe'. v. a. [imbibo, Lat. imbiber, French.]

1. To drink in; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.
The torrent merciless imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Swift.
Illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun. Thomson.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.
It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.
Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts.

3. To drench; to saturate; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissolvable in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metalick salt. Newton.

IMBI'BER, ĭm-bī'bûr.[98] n. s. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous streams. Arbuthnot.

IMBIBI'TION, ĭm-bĕ-bĭsh'ŭn. n. s. [imbibition, Fr. from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.
A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest: many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBI'TTER, ĭm-bĭt'tûr.[98] v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison.
Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame? South.

3. To exasperate.

To IMBO'DY, ĭm-bŏd'dē. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter; to make corporeal.

An opening cloud reveals
An heavenly form imbody'd, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our imbodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville's Scepsis.

3. To bring together into one mass or company; to incorporate.

I by vow am so imbodied yours,
That she which marries you, must marry me. Shak.
Never since created man
Met such imbodied force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry,
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Under their head imbody'd all in one. Milton.
Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops imbodied, from the Sabine land. Dryden.

4. To enclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marle. Woodward.

To IMBO'DY, ĭm-bŏd'dē. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.
The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke.

To IMBO'IL, ĭm-bŏĭl'. v. n. [from boil.] To exestuate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron. Not in use.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboiling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBO'LDEN, ĭm-bōl'd'n.[103] v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die:
Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shaksp.
I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shaksp.
I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.
Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden.
Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBO'SOM, ĭm-bŏŏ'zŭm.[169] v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite
By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the Son. Milton.
Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of sight he nurst. Sidney.
Who glad t' imbosom his affection vile,
Did all she might, more plainly to appear. F. Q.

To IMBO'UND, ĭm-bŏŭnd'.[312] v. a. [from bound.] To enclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,
Which was imbounded in this beauteous clay. Shakspeare.

To IMBO'W, ĭm-bŏŭ'.[322] v. a. [from bow.] To arch; to vault.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure,
Imbowed with gold and gorgeous ornament. F. Q.
Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference; they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.

Let my due feet never fail

To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high imboived roof,
With antick pillar massy proof. Milton.

To IMBO'WER, îm-bôû'ûr [322] v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

And stooping thence to Ham's imbowering walks,
In spotless peace retired. Thomson.

IMBO'WMENT, îm-bôû'mênt. n. s. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbowment near any of the walls left. Bacon.

To IMBRA'NGLE, îm-brâng'gl. v. a. To entangle. A low word.

With subtle cobweb cheats
They 're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;
In which, when once they are imbrangled,
The more they stir, the more they 're tangled.
Hudibras.

I'MBRICATED, îm'brê-kâ-têd. adj. [from imbrex, Lat.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICA'TION, îm-brê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [imbrex, Lat.] Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well-made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBRO'WN, îm-brôûn'.. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton.
The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence sound. Gay.
Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.
Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henry stands. Pope.

To IMBRU'E, îm-brôô'. [339] v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long. This seems indifferently written with im or em. I have sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.
There streams a spring of blood so fast
From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face
Of that accursed caitiff. Daniel's Civil War.
The merciless Turks, embrued with the christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolle's History.
At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue.
Sandys.
Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood.
Addison.
Lo! these hands in murder are imbru'd,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.
There, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar descry'd
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin sword Ægysthus' veins imbru'd;
The murd'rer fell, and blood aton'd for blood.
Pope.
A good man chooses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood. Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft embrue
The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. F. Q.

To IMBRU'TE, îm-brôôt'. [339] v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.

I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

To IMBRU'TE, îm-brôôt'. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

To IMBU'E, îm-bû'. [335] v. a. [imbuo, Lat. This word, which seems wanting in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest. Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning, among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.
Clothes which have once been thoroughly imbued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.
Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tinctured with the colour. Woodward.

To IMBU'RSE, îm-bûrse'. v. a. [bourse, French.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, French.

IMITABI'LITY, îm-ê-tâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [imitabilitas, Latin.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

I'MITABLE, îm'ê-tâ-bl. [405] adj. [imitabilis, Lat. imitable, French.]

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh.
As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayward.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To I'MITATE, îm'ê-tâte. [91] v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.
Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.
I would caress some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITA'TION, îm-mê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [imitatio, Latin; imitation, French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division upon the groundwork. Dryden.

I'MITATIVE, îm'ê-tâ-tîv. [512] adj. [imitativus, Latin.]

1. Inclined to copy: as, man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance: as, painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITA'TOR, îm'ê-tâ-tûr. [98] n. s. [Latin; imitateur, Fr.] One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says the poet. Dryden.

IMMA'CULATE, îm-mâk'kû-lâte. [91] adj. [immaculatus, Latin; immaculé, French.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hooker.
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shaksp.
The king, whom catholicks count a saint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.
Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, Heav'n did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shaksp.

To IMMA'NACLE, îm-mân'nâ-kl. [405] v. a. [from manacle.] To fetter; to confine.

Thou can'st not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanacled. Milton.

IMMA'NE, îm-mâne'. adj. [immanis, Lat.] Vast; prodigiously great.

I'MMANENT, îm'mâ-nênt. adj. [immanent, French; in and maneo, Latin.] Intrinsick; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellections, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanville.
What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMA'NIFEST, îm-mân'nê-fêst. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest, not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown.

IMMA'NITY, îm-mân'nê-tê. n. s. [immanitas, Latin.] Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shaks.

IMMARCE'SSIBLE, îm-mâr-sês'sê-bl. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading. Dict.

IMMA'RTIAL, îm-mâr'shâl. [88] adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My pow'rs are unfit,
Myself immartial. Chapman's Odyssey.

To IMMA'SK, im-mâsk'. v.a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. Shaksp.

IMMATE'RIAL, im-mâ-tē'rē-âl. adj. [immateriel, French; in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;
So hath she not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillotson.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIA'LITY, im-mâ-tē-rē-âl'ē-tē. n. s. [from immaterial.] Incorporiety; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit; we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATE'RIALLY, im-mâ-tē'rē-âl-ē. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Browns Vulgar Errours.

IMMATE'RIALIZED, im-mâ-tē'rē-âl-iz'd.[359] adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville's Scepsis.

IMMATE'RIALNESS, im-mâ-tē'rē-âl-nēs. n. s. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATE'RIATE, im-mâ-tē'rē-âte.[91] adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immateriate, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immateriate, or less materiate; such as this of sounds. Bacon.

IMMATU'RE, im-mâ-tûre'. adj. [immaturus, Latin.]

1. Not ripe.
2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprize of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate:
Let now your immature dissention cease,
Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives 'till seventy. Taylor.

IMMATU'RELY, im-mâ-tûre'lē. adv. [from immature.] Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

IMMATU'RENESS, im-mâ-tûre'nēs. } n. s.
IMMATU'RITY, im-mâ-tû'rē-tē. } [from immature.] Unripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenuous for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgment. Glanville.

IMMEABI LITY, im-mē-â-bîl'ē-tē. n. s. [immeabilis, Latin.] Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

From this phlegm proceed white cold tumours, viscidity, and consequently immeability of the juices. Arbuthnot.

IMMEA'SURABLE, im-mēzh'ù-râ-bl. adj. [in and measure.] Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them. Hooker.

From the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild. Milton.

Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean. Milton.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether! Addison's Guardian.

Nor friends are there, nor vessels to convey,
Nor oars to cut th' immeasurable way. Pope.

IMMEA'SURABLY, im-mēzh'ù-râ-blē. adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely; beyond all measure.

The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead. Spenser.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd
Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey. Milton.

IMMECHA'NICAL, im-mē-kân'nē-kâl. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanicks.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Cheyne.

Nothing will clear a head possessed with immechanical notions. Mead.

IMME'DIACY, im-mē'dē-â-sē or im-mē'jē-â-sē. n. s. [from immediate.] Personal greatness; power of acting without dependance. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to Shakspeare.

He led our pow'rs,
Bore the commission of my place and person,
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother. King Lear.

IMME'DIATE, im-mē'dē-ât.[91 293 294 376] adj. [immediat, French; in and medius, Lat.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time. Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Shakspeare.

Death denounc'd that day,
Which he presumes already vain, and void,
Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd
By some immediate stroke. Milton.

But she, howe'er of vict'ry sure,
Contemns the wreath too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate pow'r,
Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMME'DIATELY, im-mē'dē-ât-lē. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. South.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip
Away with Slender, and with him at Eton
Immediately to marry. Shakspeare.

2. Exemption from second or intervening causes.

IMME'DICABLE, im-mēd'dē-kâ-bl. adj. [immedicabilis, Latin.] Not to be healed; incurable.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

IMME'MORABLE, im-mēm'mò-râ-bl. adj. [immemorabilis, Latin.] Not worth remembering.

IMMEMO'RIAL, im-mē-mò'rē-âl. adj. [immemorial, French; in and memoria, Lat.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South.

IMME'NSE, im-mēnse'. adj. [immense, French; immensus, Latin.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense!
That all this good of evil shall produce! Milton.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being. Grew.

IMME'NSELY, im-mēns'lē. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal mass. Bentley.

IMME'NSITY, im-mēn'sē-tē. n. s. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating,

as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabrick, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,
And millions which the glass can ne'er descry,
Lost in the wilds of vast immensity,
Are suns, are centers. Blackmore's Creation.

IMMENSURABI'LITY, ĭm mĕn-shŭ-rȧ-bĭl'ĕ-tē.[452] n. s. [from immensurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMME'RIT, ĭm-mĕr'ĭt. n. s. [immerito, Lat.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me. Suckling.

To IMME'RSE, ĭm-mĕrse'. v. a. [immersus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.
2. To sink or cover deep.

He stood
More than a mile immers'd within the wood;
At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immersed in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immersed in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them. Addison's Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world; we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves deeply in the enjoyments of them. Atterbury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this. Atterbury.

IMME'RSE, ĭm-mĕrse'. adj. [immersus, Latin.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immateriate, or less materiate; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Addison's Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.
3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, swerve from the rules of their holy faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

IMMETHO'DICAL, ĭm-mĕ-thŏd'ĕ-kȧl. adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

M. Bayle compares the answering of an immethodical author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your sight, he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addison.

IMMETHO'DICALLY, ĭm-mĕ-thŏd'ĕ-kȧl-ē. adv. [from immethodical.] Without method; without order.

I'MMINENCE, ĭm'mĕ-nĕnse. n. s. [from imminent.] Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. Not in use.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Shakspeare.

I'MMINENT, ĭm'mĕ-nĕnt. adj. [imminent, French; imminens, Latin.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death. Shak.

These she applies for warnings and portents
Of evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Shaks.

To them preach'd

The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings. Dryd.

The Mercury of heav'n, with silver wings
Impt for the flight, to overtake his ghost. Southern.

To IMPA'CT, ĭm-păkt'. v. a. [impactus, Latin.] To drive close or hard.

They are angular; but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted so thick and confusedly together. Woodward.

To IMPA'INT, ĭm-pānt'. v. a. [in and paint.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.

Never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impaint his cause. Shaksp.

To IMPA'IR, ĭm-pāre'. v. a. [empirer, make worse, French. Skinner.] To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence.

To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual. Hooker.

Objects divine
Must needs impair, and weary human sense. Milt.

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton.

Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.

In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years. Pope.

To IMPA'IR, ĭm-pâre'. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair, quoth he; but reason can repair. Fairy Queen.

IMPA'IR, ĭm-pâre'. n. s. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not used.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by site than dust of steel. Brown.

IMPA'IRMENT, ĭm-pâre'mĕnt. n. s. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

IMPA'LPABLE, ĭm-pâl'pâ-bl.[405] adj. [impalpable, French; in and palpable.] Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.

To IMPA'RADISE, ĭm-pâr'â-dise. v. a. [imparadisare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadised neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney.

All my souls be
Imparadis'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Donne.

Thus these two,
Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton.

IMPA'RITY, ĭm-pâr'ĕ-tĕ. n. s. [imparitas, impar, Lat.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in that lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown.

To IMPA'RK, ĭm-pârk.[81] v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common.

To IMPA'RT, ĭm-pârt'. v. a. [impartior, Latin.]

1. To grant; to give.

High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.

Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins. Shaksp.

As in confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts
Wast wont, I mine to thee was won't t' impart. Milton.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a partaker.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milton.

IMPA'RTIAL, ĭm-pâr'shâl.[88] adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear;
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Jove is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden.

IMPARTIA'LITY, ĭm-pâr-shĕ-ăl'ĕ-tĕ. n. s. [impartialité, Fr. from impartial.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well-disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it. South.

IMPA'RTIALLY, ĭm-pâr'shâl-ĕ. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South.

IMPA'RTIBLE, ĭm-pârt'ĕ-bl.[405] adj. [impartible, French; from impart.] Communicable; that may be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Digby.

IMPA'SSABLE, ĭm-pâs'sâ-bl.[405] adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Raleigh.

Over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton.

When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy desarts. Temple.

IMPASSIBI'LITY, ĭm-pâs-sĕ-bĭl'lĕ-tĕ. n. s. [impassibilité, French; from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand. Dryden.

IMPASSI'BLE, ĭm-pâs'sĕ-bl.[405] adj. [impassible, French; in and passio, Latin.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope, that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress in a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour. Hammond.

Secure of death, I should contemn thy dart,
Though naked, and impassible depart. Dryden.

IMPA'SSIBLENESS, ĭm-pâs'sĕ-bl-nĕs. n. s. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassibleness of the next? Decay of Piety.

IMPA'SSIONED, ĭm-pâsh'shŭn'd.[382] adj. [in and passion.] Disordered by passion.

So standing, moving, or to height upgrown
The tempter, all impassioned, thus began. Milton.

IMPA'SSIVE, ĭm-pâs'sĭv.[158] adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

She told him what those empty phantons were,
Forms without bodies, and impassive air. Dryden.

Pale suns, unfelt at distance, roll away:
And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play. Pope.

IMPA'STED, ĭm-pâs'tĕd. adj. [in and paste.] Concreted as into paste. Not in use.

Horridly trickt
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shaksp.

IMPA'TIENCE, ĭm-pâ'shĕnse.[463] n. s. [impatience, French; impatientia, Latin.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience. Shaksp.

The experiment I resolved to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience. Temple.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

IMPA'TIENT, ĭm-pâ'shĕnt.[463] adj. [impatient, French; impatiens, Latin.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear: with of.

Fame impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.

The tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound. Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion: with at before the occasion: with of impatience is referred more to the thing, with at to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel. Taylor.

4. Hot; hasty.

The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him. Addison.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay: with for before the thing desired.

The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd pow'r. Dryden.

On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands;
Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands. Pope.

IMPA'TIENTLY, ĭm-pâ'shĕnt-lĕ. adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage; under uneasiness.

2. Passionately; ardently.

He considered one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration. Clarendon.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.

To IMPA'WN, ĭm-pâwn'. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again. Shaksp.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall invite us to;
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shaksp.

To IMPE'ACH, îm-pêêtsh'. v. a. [empêcher, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use.

Each door he opened without any breach;
There was no bar to stop, nor foe him to impeach. Spenser.

His sons did impeach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life. Davies.

If they will impeach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy. Hayward.

A defluxion on my throat impeached my utterance. Howel.

2. To accuse by public authority.

They were both impeached by a house of commons. Addison.

Great dissentions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had impeached. Swift.

IMPE'ACH, îm-pêêtsh'. n. s. [from the verb.] Hinderance; let; impediment.

Why, what an intricate impeach is this!
If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly. Shakspeare.

IMPE'ACHABLE, îm-pêêtsh'â-bl. adj. [from impeach.] Accusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable. Grew.

IMPE'ACHER, îm-pêêtsh'ûr.[98] n. s. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour. Government of the Tongue.

1. Hinderance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impeachment to the good government thereof. Spenser.

Tell thy king I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais,
Without impeachment. Shaksp.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impeachment to christian liberty, or ensnaring of men's consciences. Sanderson.

2. Publick accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Devis'd impeachments to imprison him. Shaksp.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impeachment, was instant with them for the prosecution. Addison.

The consequences of Coriolanus's impeachment had like to have been fatal to their state. Swift.

To IMPE'ARL, îm-pêrl'. v. a. [in and pearl.]

1. To form in resemblance of pearls.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on every leaf, and ev'ry flow'r. Milton.

2. To decorate as with pearls.

The dews of the morning impearl every thorn, and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth. Digby to Pope.

IMPECCABI'LITY, îm-pêk-kâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [impeccabilité, French; from impeccable.] Exemption from sin; exemption from failure.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes. Pope.

IMPE'CCABLE, îm-pêk'kâ-bl.[405] adj. [impeccable, French; in and pecco, Latin.] Exempt from possibility of sin.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that were a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his. Hammond on Fundamentals.

To IMPE'DE, îm-pêde'. v. a. [impedio, Lat.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede his passage. Decay of Piety.

The stars return, or to impede their course. Creech.

IMPE'DIMENT, îm-pêd'ê-mênt. n. s. [impedimentum, Latin.] Hinderance; let; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience. Sidney.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them. Hooker.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let. Hooker.

But for my tears
The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke. Shaksp.

May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shews,
Dream of impediment. Shaksp.

They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech. Mark.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom; and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to lose his life with torments. Taylor.

Free from th' impediments of light and noise,
Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs. Waller.

To IMPE'L, îm-pêl'. v. a. [impello, Latin.] To drive on toward a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Mirrah's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide. Dryden.

The surge impell'd me on a craggy coast. Pope.

Propitious gales
Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails. Pope.

A mightier pow'r the strong direction sends,
And sev'ral men impels to sev'ral ends;
This drives them constant to a certain coast. Pope.

IMPE'LLENT, îm-pêl'lênt. n. s. [impellens, Lat.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture. Glanville.

To IMPE'ND, îm-pênd'. v. n. [impendeo, Latin.]

1. To hang over.

Destruction sure o'er all your heads impends;
Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends. Pope.

2. To be at hand; to press nearly. It is used in an ill sense.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins, and our lively sense of God's impending wrath. Smalridge.

No story I unfold of public woes,
Nor bear advices of impending foes. Pope

IMPE'NDENT, îm-pên'dênt. adj. [impendens, Lat.] Imminent; hanging over; pressing closely. In an ill sense.

If the evil feared or impendent be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rules the appetite to aversation. Hale.

Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain
Place Ormond's duke: impendent in the air
Let his keen sabre, comet-like, appear. Prior.

IMPE'NDENCE, îm-pên'dênse. n. s. [from impendent.] The state of hanging over; near approach.

Good sometimes is not safe to be attempted, by reason of the impendence of a greater sensible evil. Hale.

IMPENETRABI'LITY, îm-pên-ê-trâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [impenetrabilité, French; from impenetrable.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable, or permeable.

All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard, or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton.

2. Insusceptibility of intellectual impression.

IMPE'NETRABLE, îm-pên'ê-trâ-bl. adj. [impenetrable, French; impenetrabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.

With hard'ning cold, and forming heat,
The Cyclops did their strokes repeat,
Before th' impenetrable shield was wrought. Dryd.

2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross: things, thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them, and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity. Locke.

3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.

4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.

It is the most impenetrable cur
That ever kept with men.
——Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers. Shakspeare.

Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but impenetrable by a sermon of the gospel. Taylor.

IMPE'NETRABLY, îm-pên'ê-trâ-blê. adv. [from impenetrable.] With hardness to a degree incapable of impression.

Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull
Of solid proofs, impenetrably dull. Pope.

IMPE'NITENCE, îm-pên'ê-tênse. } n. s.
IMPE'NITENCY, îm-pên'ê-tên-sê. }
[impenitence, French; in and penitence.] Obduracy; want of remorse for crimes; final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence. South.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life. Tillotson.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, 'till at last he becomes hardened without remorse. Rogers.

IMPE'NITENT, îm-pên'ê-tênt. adj. [impenitent, French; in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our lord in anger hath granted some impenitent men's request; as, on the other side, the apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted. Hooker.

They dy'd
Impenitent, and left a race behind
Like to themselves. Milton.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other. Hammond.

IMPE'NITENTLY, ĭm-pĕn'ĕ-tĕnt-lĕ. adv. [from impenitent.] Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and died in. Hammond.

What crowds of these impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets! Pope.

IMPE'NNOUS, ĭm-pĕn'nŭs.[314] adj. [in and penna, Latin.] Wanting wings. This word is convenient, but, I think, not used.

It is generally received an earwig hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impennous insects; but he that shall with a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies. Brown.

I'MPERATE, ĭm'pĕ-rāte.[91] adj. [imperatus, Latin.] Done with consciousness; done by direction of the mind.

The elicit internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external imperate acts of the same habit utterly cease. South.

Those natural and involuntary actings are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those imperate acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul. Hale.

IMPE'RATIVE, ĭm-pĕr'rā-tĭv. adj. [impératif, French; imperativus, Lat.] Commanding; expressive of command.

The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, intreating; which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

IMPE'RATIVELY, ĭm-pĕr'rā-tĭv-lĕ. adv. In a commanding style; authoritatively.

IMPERCE'PTIBLE, ĭm-pĕr-sĕp'tĕ-bl. adj. [imperceptible, French; in and perceptible.] Not to be discovered; not to be perceived; small; subtile; quick or slow, so as to elude observation.

Some things are in their nature imperceptible by our sense; yea, and the more refined parts of material existence, which, by reason of their subtilty, escape our perception. Hale.

In the sudden changes of his subject with almost imperceptible connections, the Theban poet is his master. Dryden.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, or the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost imperceptible to the touch, and even. Dryden.

The alterations in the globe are very slight, and almost imperceptible, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth. Wood.

IMPERCE'PTIBLENESS, ĭm-pĕr-sĕp'tĕ-blnĕs. n. s. [from imperceptible.] The quality of eluding observation.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtilty and imperceptibleness to us, are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

IMPERCE'PTIBLY, ĭm-pĕr-sĕp'tĕ-blĕ. adv. [from imperceptible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

Upon reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself imperceptibly, we are taught by surprise, and become wiser and better unawares. Addison.

IMPE'RFECT, ĭm-pĕr'fĕct. adj. [imparfait, Fr. imperfectus, Lat.]

1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Used either of persons or things.

Something he left imperfect in the state,
Which, since his coming forth, is thought of,
Which brought the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was most required. Shakspeare.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination; but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben Jonson.

The middle action, which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly called, by some of the ancients, inquination or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.

Divers things we agree to be knowledge, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.

A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Harvey on Consumption.

The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.

IMPE'RIAL, ĭm-pē'rē-ăl.[88] adj. [impérial, French; imperialis, Latin.]

1. Royal; possessing royalty.

Aim he took
At a fair vestal, throned in the west;
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quench'd in the chaste beams of the wat'ry moon,
And the imperial vot'ress passed on
In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakspeare.

2. Betokening royalty; marking sovereignty.

My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

3. Belonging to an emperour or monarch; regal; royal; monarchical.

The main body of the marching foe
Against th' imperial palace is designed. Dryden.

You that are a sov'reign prince, allay

I'MPULSE, îm'pûlse. n. s. [impulsus, Latin.]

1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another.

If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Locke.

Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Cheyne.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea impressed.

Meantime, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dryden.

Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
Sustain the impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPU'LSION, îm-pûl'shûn. n. s. [impulsion, Fr. impulsus, Lat.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

But thou didst plead
Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st
Find some occasion to infest our foes. Milton.

IMPU'LSIVE, îm-pûl'sîv. adj. [impulsif, Fr. from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience:
But those being placed in a lower sphere,
His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion
Against their proper course. Denham.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they
Do some impulsive force obey,
And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPU'NITY, îm-pû'nê-tê. n. s. [impunité, French; impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury.

IMPU'RE, îm-pûre'. adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Latin.]

1. Defiled with guilt; unholy: of men.

No more can impure man retain and move
In that pure region of a worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

2. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy: of things.

Hypocrites austerely talk,
Condemning as impure what God has made
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

3. Unchaste.

If black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shak.

One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.

4. Feculent; foul with extraneous mixtures; drossy.

Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action. Shaksp.

If a son that is sent by his father about merchandise, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shaksp.

To use intellections and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypothesis, is allowable: but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Glanville.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self conceit on the subject. Dryden.

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shaksp.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatsoever happens they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

4. Hint; slight notice.

Anthonia is a good man.

—Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?

—No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shaksp.

IMPUTA'TIVE, ĭm-pū'tā-tĭv.[612] adj. [from impute.] That may impute. Ainsworth.

To IMPU'TE, ĭm-pūte'. v. a. [imputer, French; imputo, Latin.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Rom.

Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived; for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and impairs others; and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryden.

This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of stile. Locke.

I have read a book imputed to lord Bathurst, called a dissertation on parties. Swift.

8. For the sake. A solem phrase.

Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shaksp.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we
Banish him our city, Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Now, in the name of honour, sir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death reveng'd. Dryd.

9. Noting cause.

King Henry, be thy title wright or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shaksp.

10. IN that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wise men, and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men misled, and blinded with error. Hooker.

He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search. Shakspeare.

11. IN as much. Since; seeing that.

Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would. Hooker.

IN, ĭn. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falsehood as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the sacredest bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South.

I fear me, you 'll be in 'till then. Shaksp.

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the worst can come; 'tis thought upon:
We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Daniel.

These pragmatical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estrange.

3. Placed in some state.

Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who 's in, who 's out. Shakspeare.

Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in? Pope.

4. Noting immediate entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shak.

He 's too big to go in there: what shall I do?—Let me see 't! I 'll in, I 'll in;—follow your friend's—advice: I 'll in. Shakspeare.

5. Into any place.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryd.

Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm? Collier.

In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve, larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Woodward.

6. Close; home.

The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.

7. IN has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as illative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.

INABI'LITY, ĭn-â-bĭl'ĕ-tē. n. s. [in and ability.] Impuissance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they, always delighting to inure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and through experience the more wisdom. Hooker.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended: and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation? Rogers.

INA'BSTINENCE, ĭn-ăb'stĕ-nĕnse. n. s. [in and abstinence.] Intemperance; want of power to abstain; prevalence of appetite.

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve
Shall bring on man. Milton.

INACCE'SSIBLE, ĭn-ăk-sĕs'sĕ-bl. adj. [inaccessible, French; in and accessible.] Not to be reached; not to be approached.

Whate'er you are,
That in this desart inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shak.

Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale.

There shall we see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtile for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distinct view of. Ray.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her. Dryden.

INA'CCURACY, ĭn-ăk'kū-rā-sē. n. s. [from inaccurate.] Want of exactness.

INA'CCURATE, ĭn-ăk'kū-rāte.[91] adj. [in and accurate.] Not exact; not accurate. It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.

INA'CTION, ĭn-ăk'shŭn. n. s. [inaction, French; in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.

The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present: I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.

INA'CTIVE, ĭn-ăk'tĭv. adj. [in and active.] Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent; sluggish.

INA'CTIVELY, ĭn-ăk'tĭv-lē. adv. [from inactive.] Idly; without labour; without motion; sluggishly.

In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.

INACTI'VITY, ĭn-ăk-tĭv'ĕ-tē. n. s. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.

A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers.

Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
Is inactivity at best. Swift.

INA'DEQUATE, ĭn-ăd'ĕ-kwāte.[91] adj. [in and adequatus, Latin.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.

Remorse for vice
Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
What farther means can reason now direct? Dryd.

Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes o which they are referred. Locke.

INA'DEQUATELY, ĭn-ăd'ĕ-kwāte-lē. adv

[from inadequate.] Defectively; not completely.

These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.

To INA'NIMATE, în-ân'ê-mâte. v. a. [in and animo, Latin.] To animate; to quicken. Not in use.

There is a kind of world remaining still,
Though she which did inanimate and fill
The world be gone; yet in this last long night
Her ghost doth walk, that is, a glimmering light.
Donne.

INA'NIMATE, în-ân'ê-mâte.[91] } adj. [in-
INA'NIMATED, în-ân'ê-mâ-têd. } nimatus, Latin; inanime, French.] Void of life; without animation.

The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled; but inanimate bodies have spirits no whit inflamed. Bacon.

The golden goddess, present at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' inanimated fair,
And gave the sign of granting. Dryden.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Bentley.

Both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimated part of the universe. Cheyne.

From roofs when Verrio's colours fall,
And leave inanimate the naked wall,
Still in thy song should vanquished France appear.
Pope.

INANI'TION, în-â-nîsh'ûn. n. s. [inanition, French; inanis, Latin.] Emptiness of body; want of fulness in the vessels of the animal.

Weakness which attends fevers proceeds from too great fulness in the beginning, and too great inanition in the latter end of the disease. Arbuthnot.

INA'NITY, în-ân'ê-tê.[511] n. s. [from inanis, Latin.] Emptiness; void space.

This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities but so little ones as nobody whatever can come to, but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide. Digby.

INA'PPETENCY, în-âp'pê-tên-sê. n. s. [in and appetentia, Latin.] Want of stomach or appetite.

To INA'RCH, în-ârtsh'[81] v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare aware the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INARTI'CULATE, în-ârtik'û-lâte.[91] adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness, like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Wilkins.

By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn musick, which is inarticulate poesy, doth in churches. Dryden.

INARTI'CULATELY, în-ârtik'kû-lâte-lê. adv. [from inarticulate.] Not distinctly.

INAURA'TION, în-âw-râ'shûn. n. s. [inauro, Latin.] The act of gilding or covering with gold.

The Romans had the art of gilding after our manner; but some sort of their inauration, or gilding, must have been much dearer than ours. Arbuthnot.

INAUSPI'CIOUS, în-âw-spîsh'ûs. adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill-omened; unlucky; unfortunate.

Oh here
I will set up my everlasting rest?
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Shaksp.

Though Heaven's inauspicious eye
Lay black on love's nativity,
Her eye a strong appeal can give:
Beauty smiles, and love shall live. Crashaw.

The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces. Boyle.

With inauspicious love a wretched swain
Pursu'd the fairest nymph of all the plain;
She plung'd him hopeless in a deep despair. Dryd.

INBE'ING, în-bê'ing. n. s. [in and being.] Inherence; inseparableness.

When we say the bowl is round, the boy is witty, these are proper or inherent modes; for they have a sort of inbeing in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it. Watts.

I'NBORN, în'bôrn. adj. [in and born.] Innate; implanted by nature.

Led by sense of good
Inborn to all, I sought my needful food. Dryden.

All passions being inborn within us, we are almost equally judges of them. Dryden.

Some Carolina, to Heaven's dictates true,
Thy inborn worth with conscious eyes shall see,
And slight th' imperial diadem for thee. Addison.

INBRE'ATHED, în-brêTH'd'.[362] adj. [in and breath.] Inspired; infused by inspiration.

Blest pair of syrens, pledges of Heaven's joy,

The oil preserves the ends of the bones from incalescency, which they, being solid bodies, would necessarily contract from a swift motion. Ray.

INCANTA'TION în-kân-tâ'shûn. n. s. [incantation, French; incanto, Lat.] Charms uttered by singing; enchantment.

My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong. Shaksp.

By Adam's hearkening to his wife, mankind, by that her incantation, became the subject of labour, sorrow, and death. Raleigh.

The great wonders of witches, their carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, are reported to be wrought, not by incantations or ceremonies, but by anointing themselves all over, move a man to think that these fables are the effects of imagination; for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.

The name of a city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms and incantations. Brown.

The nuptial rites his outrage strait attends;
The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends:
The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.

The commands which our religion hath imposed on its followers are not like the absurd ceremonies of pagan idolatry, that might look like incantation and magick, but had no tendency to make mankind the happier. Bentley.

INCA'NTATORY, în-kân'tâ-tûr-ê.[512] adj. [from incanto, Latin.] Dealing by enchantment; magical.

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving. Hale.

I'NCHOATIVE, în-kŏ'ā-tîv.[157] adj. [inchoative, Fr. inchoativus, Lat.] Inceptive; noting inchoation or beginning.

To INCI'DE, în-side'. v. a. [from incido, to cut, Latin.]

Medicines are said to incide which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and most salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another: thus expectorating medicines are said to incide or cut the phlegm. Quincy.

The menses are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incide the mucus in the first passages. Arbuthnot.

I'NCIDENCE, în'sê-dênse. } n. s. [incido, to I'NCIDENCY, în'sê-dên-sê. } fall, Latin; incidence, French.]

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plain struck upon, is called the angle of incidence. In the occursions of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact. Quincy.

In mirrours there is the like angle of incidence, from the object of the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflection than from the direct incidency of his happiness. Norris.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

2. [incidens, Latin.] Accident; hap; casualty.

What incidency thou do'st guess of harm declâre,
Is creeping towards me. Shaksp.

I'NCIDENT, în'sê-dênt. adj. [incident, French; incidens, Latin.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidently; issuing in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise men's rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hooker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Wotton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be guilty of. South.

I'NCIDENT, în'sê-dênt. n. s. [incident, Fr. from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom shall fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon.

No person, no incident in the play, but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryden.

INCIDE'NTAL, în-sê-dên'tâl. adj. Incident; casual; happening by chance; not intended; not deliberate; not necessary to the chief purpose.

The satisfaction you received from those incidental discourses which we have wandered into. Milton.

By some religious duties scarce appear to be regarded at all, and by others only as an incidental business, to be done when they have nothing else to do. Rogers.

INCIDE'NTALLY, în-sê-dên'tâl-ê. adv. [from incidental.] Beside the main design; occasionally.

These general rules are but occasionally and incidentally mentioned in Scripture, rather to manifest unto us a former, than to lay upon us a new obligation. Sanderson.

I treat either purposely or incidentally of colours. Boyle.

I'NCIDENTLY, în'sê-dênt-lê. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally; by the by; by the way.

It was incidently moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attainted; but resolved that the crown takes away defects. Bacon.

To INCI'NERATE, în-sîn'nêr-râte. v. a. [in and cineres, Lat.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat endurateth, then maketh fragile; lastly, it doth incinerate and calcinate. Bacon.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and incinerate. Bacon.

These dregs are soon incinerated and calcined into such salts which produce coughs. Harvey.

INCINERA'TION, în-sîn-nêr-râ'shûn. n. s. [incineration, French; from incinerate.] The act of burning any thing to ashes.

I observed in the fixt salt of urine, brought by depuration to be very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and very differing from the caustick lixivate taste of other salts made by incineration. Boyle.

INCIRCUMSPE'CTION, în-sêr-kûm-spêk'-shûn. n. s. [in and circumspection.] Want of caution; want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of their belief. Brown.

INCI'SED, în-sîz'd'.[362] adj. [inciser, French; incisus, Latin.] Cut; made by cutting: as, an incised wound.

I brought the incised lips together. Wiseman.

INCI'SION, în-sîzh'ûn. n. s. [incision, Fr. incisio, Latin.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a chirurgeon.

Let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.
Shakspeare.

God help thee, shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw. Shakspeare.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Abstersion is a scouring off, or incision of viscious humours, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in nitrous water, which scoureth linen. Bacon.

INCI'SIVE, în-sî'sîv.[158 428] adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Lat.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors. Boyle.

INCI'SURE, în-sîzh'ûre. n. s. [incisura, Latin.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and comminuting of hard food. Derham.

INCITA'TION, în-sê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse; the act of inciting; the power of inciting.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, and union of one magnetical body unto another. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations. Government of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity. Decay of Piety.

To INCI'TE, în-sîte'. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shaksp.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But, love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.
Shakspeare.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom. Bacon.

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

INCI'TEMENT, în-sîte'mênt. n. s. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

Hartlib seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island. Milton

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of a distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage. Pope.

INCI'VIL, în-sî'vîl. adj. [incivil, French.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVI'LITY, în-sê-vîl'lê-tê. n. s. [incivilité, French; in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility. Tillotson.

2. Act of rudeness. In this sense it has a plural.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor.

INCLE'MENCY, în-klêm'mên-sê. n. s. [inclemence, Fr. inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heav'ns inclemency some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left. Dryden.

INCLE'MENT, în-klêm'mênt. adj. [in and clemens, Lat.] Unmerciful; unpitying;

void of tenderness; harsh. It is used oftner of things than of men.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow.
Milton.

I stand
Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vest supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky.
Pope.

INCLI'NABLE, în-klî'nâ-bl. adj. [inclinabilis, Latin.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition: with to.

People are not always inclinable to the best.
Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain men's writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured. Hooker.

Desire,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye. Milton.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last: but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINA'TION, în-klé-nâ'shûn. n. s. [inclinaison, inclination, Fr. inclinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency toward any point: with to.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter.
Newton's Opticks.

2. Natural aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way. Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Clarend.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual nonperformance of the law? South.

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

5. Disposition of mind.

Bid him
Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

6. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the east or west.

7. [In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some feces or sediment by only stooping the vessel, which is also called decantation. Quincy.

INCLI'NATORY, în-klîn'â-tûr-ê. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline. Brown.

INCLI'NATORILY, în-klîn'â-tûr-rê-lê. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from north and south.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatorily, or somewhat equinoxially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To INCLI'NE, în-kline'. v. a. [inclino, Latin; incliner, French.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend toward any part: with to or toward.

Her house inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead. Proverbs.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way. Rowe.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
——He seems indifferent;
Or rather swaying more upon our part. Shaksp.
Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech.
Judges.

To INCLI'NE, în-kline'. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight, inclines
Our eye-lids. Milton.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field. Pope.
A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclin'd.
Pope.

2. To turn toward any thing, as desirous or attentive.

Incline our hearts to keep this law. Com. Prayer.
You have not inclined your ear unto me.
Jeremiah.

But that from us aught should ascend to heav'n
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer.
Milton.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

With due respect my body I inclin'd,
As to some being of superior kind. Dryden.

To INCLI'P, în-klîp'. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to enclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine if thou wilt ha 't. Shakspeare.

To INCLO'ISTER, în-klôîs'tûr. v. a. [in and cloister.] To shut up in a cloister.

To INCLO'UD, în-klôûd'. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be inclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour. Shakspeare.

To INCLU'DE, în-klûde'. v. a. [includo, Latin.]

1. To enclose, to shut in: as, the shell includes a pearl.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one entire lease. Bacon.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included. Swift.

INCLU'SIVE, în-klû'sîv.[168 428] adj. [inclusif, French.]

1. Enclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red hot steel, to sear me to the brain! Shak.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells. Swift.

INCLU'SIVELY, în-klû'sîv-lê. adv. [from inclusive.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively. Hale.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differenced partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Holder.

INCOA'GULABLE, în-kô-âg'gû-lâ-bl. adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXI'STENCE, în-kô-êg-zîs'tênse. n. s. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence. An unusual word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connexion between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCO'G, în-kôg'. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you 're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it, he'll remain incog. Addison.

INCO'GITANCY, în-kôd'jê-tân-sê. n. s. [incogitantia, Lat.] Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to succeeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Decay of Piety.

INCO'GITATIVE, în-kôd'jê-tâ-tîv. adj. [in and cogitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCO'GNITO, în-kôg'nê-tô. adv. [incognitus, Latin.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago
Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHE'RENCE, în-kô-hê'rênse. } n. s. [in and coherence.]
INCOHE'RENCY, în-kô-hê'rên-sê. }

1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaister be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

2. Want of connexion; incongruity; inconsequence of argument; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

INCOHE'RENT, în-kô-hê'rênt. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marl or gravel. Woodward.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

INCOHE'RENTLY, în-kô-hê'rênt-lê. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Broome.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompetibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intention or extension; but the incompetibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPA'TIBLE, în-kôm-pât'ê-bl. adj. [incompatible, Fr. rather incompetible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else; it is followed by with.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckling.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompetible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hammond.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate texture. Bentley.

2. It is used sometimes with to.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the incompossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

INCOMPA'TIBLY, în-kôm-pât'ê-blê. adv. [for incompetibly; from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCO'MPETENCY, în-kôm'pê-tên-sê. n. s. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCO'MPETENT, în-kôm'pê-tênt. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretext, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man; nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove, the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it must be left to the opinion of the world, in spight of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryd.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCO'MPETENTLY, în-kôm'pê-tênt-lê. adv. [from incompetent.] Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLE'TE, în-kôm-plête'. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete, and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLE'TENESS, în-kôm-plête'nês. n. s. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an entire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLI'ANCE, în-kôm-plî'ânse. n. s. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictious temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillotson.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

One thing more is incomprehensible in this matter. Locke.

The laws of vegetation and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners incomprehensible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not used.

Presence every where is the sequel of an infinite and incomprehensible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended. Hooker.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBLENESS, în-kôm-prê-hên'sê-bl nês. n. s. [from incomprehensible.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's incomprehensibleness: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is incomprehensible. Watts.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBLY, în-kôm-prê-hên'sê-blê. adv. [from incomprehensible.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is incomprehensibly infinite. Locke.

INCOMPRE'SSIBLE, în-kôm-prês'sê-bl. [400] adj. [incompressible, French; in and compressible.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Hardness is the reason why water is incompressible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted. Cheyne.

INCOMPRESSIBI'LITY, în-kôm-prês-sê-bil'ê-tê. n. s. [from incompressible.] Incapacity to be squeezed into less room.

INCONCU'RRING, în-kôn-kûr'ring. adj. [in and concur.] Not concurring.

They derive effects not only from inconcurring causes, but things devoid of all efficiency. Brown.

INCONCE'ALABLE, în-kôn-sê'lâ-bl. adj. [in and conceal.] Not to be hid; not to be kept secret.

The inconcealable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us to our corruption, and tell us we are sons of earth. Brown.

INCONCEI'VABLE, în-kôn-sê'vâ-bl. adj. [inconceivable, French; in and conceivable.] Incomprehensible; not to be conceived by the mind.

Such are Christ's promises, divine inconceivable promises; a bliss to be enjoyed to all eternity, and that by way of return for a weak obedience of some few years. Hammond.

It is inconceivable to me, that a spiritual substance should represent an extended figure. Locke.

How two ethers can be diffused through all space, one of which acts upon the other, and by consequence is reacted upon, without retarding, shattering, dispersing, and confounding one another's motions, is inconceivable. Newton's Opticks.

INCONCE'IVABLY, în-kôn-sê'vâ-blê. adv. [from inconceivable.] In a manner beyond comprehension; to a degree beyond human comprehension.

Does that man take a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of those lesser troubles, to secure himself from a condition inconceivably more miserable? South.

INCONCE'PTIBLE, în-kôn-sêp'tê-bl. adj. [in and conceptible; conceptus, Lat.] Not to be conceived; incomprehensible; inconceivable. Not used.

It is inconceptible how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration, without corruption, should after be corrupted. Hale.

INCONCLU'DENT, în-kôn-klû'dênt. adj. [in- and concludens, Lat.] Inferring no consequence.

The depositions of witnesses themselves, as being false, various, contrarient, single, inconcludent. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INCONCLU'SIVE, în-kôn-klû'siv. adj. [in and conclusive.] Not enforcing any determination of the mind; not exhibiting cogent evidence.

INCONCLU'SIVELY, în-kôn-klû'sîv-lê. adv. [from inconclusive.] Without any such evidence as determines the understanding.

INCONCLU'SIVENESS, în-kôn-klû'sîv-nês. n. s. [from inconclusive.] Want of rational cogency.

A man, unskilful in syllogism, at first hearing, could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, artificial, and plausible discourse, wherewith some others, better skilled in syllogism, have been misled. Locke.

INCONCO'CT, în-kôn-kôkt'. } adj. [in
INCONCO'CTED, în-kôn-kôkt'êd. } and concoct.] Unripened; immature; not fully digested.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction.

Bacon's Natural History.

I understand, remember, and reason better in my riper years, than when I was a child, and had my organical parts less digested and inconcocted.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCONCO'CTION, ĭn-kŏn-kŏk'shŭn. n. s. [from inconcoct.] The state of being indigested; unripeness; immaturity.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called inquination, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction.
Bacon's Natural History.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction.
Bacon's Natural History.

INCO'NDITE, ĭn-kŏn'dite. adj. [inconditus, Latin.] Irregular; rude; unpolished.

Now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhymes with suiting notes,
And quaver inharmonious. Philips.

INCONDI'TIONAL, ĭn-kŏn-dĭsh'ŭn-ăl. adj. [in and conditional.] Having no conception, limitation, or stipulation.

From that which is but true in a qualified sense, an inconditional and absolute verity is inferred.
Brown.

INCONDI'TIONATE, ĭn-kŏn-dĭsh'ŭn-ăte.[91] adj. [in and condition.] Not limited; not constrained by any conditions; absolute.

They ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election or reprobation. Boyle.

INCONFO'RMITY, ĭn-kŏn-fôr'mĕ-tĕ. n. s. [in and conformity.] Incompliance with the practice of others.

We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity whereunto we should be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itself wherein they meant we should ever continue. Hooker.

INCONFU'SION, ĭn-kŏn-fū'zhŭn. n. s. [in and confusion.] Distinctness. Not used.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion in species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines, and so there can be no coincidence in the eye; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon.

INCO'NGRUENCE, ĭn-kŏng'grŏ-ĕnse.[408] n. s. [in and congruence.] Unsuitableness; want of adaptation.

Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches. Boyle.

INCONGRU'ITY, ĭn-kŏn-grŏ'ĕ-tĕ. n. s. [incongruité, French, from incongruous.]

1. Unsuitableness of one thing to another.

The fathers make use of this acknowledgement of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worship of them. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistency; inconsequence; absurdity; impropriety.

To avoid absurdities and incongruities, is the same law established for both arts: the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem. Dryden.

3. Disagreement of parts; want of symmetry.

She whom after what form soe'er we see,
Is discord and rude incongruity;
She, she is dead, she's dead. Donne.

INCO'NGRUOUS, ĭn-kŏng'grŏ-ŭs. adj. [incongru, French; in and congruous.]

1. Unsuitable; not fitting.

Wiser heathens condemned the worship of God as incongruous to a divine nature, and a disparagement to the Deity. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconsistent; absurd.

INCO'NGRUOUSLY, ĭn-kŏng'grŏ-ŭs-lĕ. adv. [from incongruous.] Improperly; unfitly.

Others ascribed hereto, as a cause, what perhaps but casually or inconnexedly succeeds. Brown.

INCO'NSCIONABLE, ĭn-kŏn'shŭn-ă-bl.[405] adj. [in and conscionable.] Void of the sense of good and evil; without influence of conscience. Not used.

So inconscionable are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or their own souls' good. Spenser.

INCO'NSEQUENCE, ĭn-kŏn'sĕ-kwĕnse. n. s. [inconsequence, French; inconsequentia, Latin.] Inconclusiveness; want of just inference.

This he bestows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with shewing the inconsequence of it, as though he did in earnest believe it were an impertinent answer. Stillingfleet.

INCO'NSEQUENT, ĭn-kŏn'sĕ-kwĕnt. adj. [in and consequens, Lat.] Without just conclusion; without regular inference.

The ground he assumes is unsound, and his illation from thence deduced inconsequent.
Hakewill on Providence.

Men rest not in false apprehensions without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferrible from their premises. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INCONSI'DERABLE, ĭn-kŏn-sĭd'ĕr-ă-bl.[405] adj. [in and considerable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant; mean; of little value.

I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing. Denham.

The most inconsiderable of creatures may at some time or other come to revenge itself upon the greatest. L'Estrange.

Casting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the greatest importance for them, they appeared to me worthy of my curiosity. Addison.

May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with less resistance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all space adequately without leaving any pores, and by consequence is much denser than quicksilver or gold? And may not its resistance be so small as to be inconsiderable? Newton.

If we were under any real fear of the papists, it would be hard to think us so stupid not to be equally apprehensive with others, since we are likely to be the greatest sufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconsiderable as the women and children. Swift.

Let no sin appear small or inconsiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal salvation endangered. Rogers.

INCONSI'DERABLENESS, ĭn-kŏn-sĭd'ĕr-ă-bl-nĕs. n. s. [from inconsiderable.] Small importance.

To those who are thoroughly convinced of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life, the consideration of a future happiness is the most powerful motive. Tillotson.

From the consideration of our own smallness and inconsiderableness, in respect to the greatness and splendor of heavenly bodies, let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts. Ray.

INCONSI'DERATE, ĭn-kŏn-sĭd'ĕr-ăte.[91] adj. [inconsideré, Fr. inconsideratus, Latin.]

1. Careless; thoughtless; negligent; inattentive; inadvertent: used both of men and things.

When thy inconsiderate hand
Flings ope this casement with my trembling name,
Then think this name alive, and that thou thus
In it offend'st my genius. Donne.

If you lament it,
That which now looks like justice, will be thought
An inconsiderate rashness. Denham's Sophy.

It is a very unhappy token of our corruption, that there should be any so inconsiderate among us as to sacrifice morality to politicks. Addison.

2. Wanting due regard; with of before the subject.

He who laid down his life for the redemption of the transgressions, which were under the first Testament, cannot be so inconsiderate of our frailties.
Decay of Piety.

INCONSI'DERATELY, ĭn-kŏn-sĭd'ĕr-ăte-lĕ.[91] adv. [from inconsiderate.] Negligently; thoughtlessly; inattentively.

The king, transported with just wrath, inconsiderately fighting and precipitating the charge before his whole numbers came up, was slain in the pursuit. Bacon.

Joseph was delighted with Mariamne's conversation, and endeavoured with all his art to set out the excess of Herod's passion for her; but when he still found her cold and incredulous, he inconsiderately told her the private orders he left behind. Addison.

INCONSI'DERATENESS, ĭn-kŏn-sĭd'ĕr-ăte-nĕs. n. s. [from inconsiderate.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; want of thought; inadvertence; inattention.

If men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to demean ourselves towards him, as becomes our relation to him, is great stupidity and inconsiderateness. Tillotson.

INCONSIDERA'TION, ĭn-kŏn-sĭd-ĕr-ā'shŭn. n. s. [inconsideration, Fr. in and consideration.] Want of thought; inattention; inadvertence.

S. Gregory reckons uncleanness to be the parent of blindness of mind, inconsideration, precipitancy or giddiness in actions, and self-love. Taylor.

INCONSI'STENCE, ĭn-kŏn-sĭs'tĕnse. } n. s.
INCONSI'STENCY, ĭn-kŏn-sĭs'tĕn-sĕ. }
[from inconsistent.]

The cognizance of her incontinency
Is this; she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly. Shaksp.

But beauty like the fair Hesperian tree,
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon-watch with uninchanted eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit
From the rash hand of bold incontinence. Milton.

This is my defence;
I pleas'd myself, I shunn'd incontinence,
And, urg'd by strong desires, indulg'd my sense. Dryden.

The words sine veste Dianam agree better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julias, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.

INCO'NTINENT, în-kŏn'tė-nĕnt. adj. [incontinens, Lat. in and continent.]

INCU'MBENT, în-kům'bėnt. adj. [incumbens, Latin.]

1. Resting upon; lying upon.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight. Milton.

The ascending parcels of air, having now little more than the weight of the incumbent water to surmount, were able both so to expand themselves as to fill up that part of the pipe which they pervaded, and, by pressing every way against the sides of it, to lift upwards with them what water they found above them. Boyle.

With wings expanded wide ourselves we 'll rear,
And fly incumbent on the dusky air. Dryden.

Here the rebel giants lye,
And, when to move th' incumbent load they try,
Ascending vapours on the day prevail. Addison.

Man is the destin'd prey of pestilence,
And o'er his guilty domes
She draws a close incumbent cloud of death. Thomson.

2. Imposed as a duty.

All men, truly zealous, will perform those good works that are incumbent on all christians. Sprat.

There is a double duty incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers. L'Estrange.

Thus, if we think and act, we shall shew ourselves duly mindful not only of the advantages we receive from thence, but of the obligations also which are incumbent upon us. Atterbury.

INCU'MBENT, în-kům'bėnt. n. s. [incumbens, Lat.] He who is in present possession of a benefice.

In many places the whole ecclesiastical dues are in lay hands, and the incumbent lieth at the mercy of his patron. Swift.

To INCU'R, în-kůr'. v. a. [incurro, Lat.]

1. To become liable to a punishment or reprehension.

I have incurred displeasure from inferiors for giving way to the faults of others. Hayward.

They, not obeying,
Incurr'd, what could they less? the penalty;
And manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall. Milton.

So judge thou still, presumptuous! 'till the wrath,
Which thou incurr'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell. Milton.

They had a full persuasive that not to do it were to desert God, and consequently to incur damnation. South.

2. To occur; to press on the senses: with to or into.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be deprehended by experience. Bacon.

The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependance; and so is he helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses. South.

INCURABI'LITY, în-ků-râ-bil'ė-tė. n. s. [incurabilité, French; from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter insusceptibility of remedy.

We 'll instantly open a door to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the incurability of the former, and facile cure of the other. Harvey.

INCU'RABLE, în-ků'râ-bl.[405] adj. [incurable, French; in and curable.] Not admitting remedy; not to be removed by medicine; irremediable; hopeless.

Pause not; for the present time 's so sick,
That present medicine must be ministred,
Or overthrow incurable ensues. Shaksp.

Stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For being green, there is great hope of help. Shak.

A schirrus is not absolutely incurable, because it has been known that fresh pasture hath cured it in cattle. Arbuthnot.

If idiots and lunaticks cannot be found, incurables may be taken into the hospital. Swift.

The soft address, the castigated grace,
Are indecorums in the modern maid. Young.

INDE'ED, în-dêêd'. adv. [in and deed.]

1. In reality; in truth; in verity.

Yet loving indeed, and therefore constant. Sidney.

Though such assemblies he had indeed for religion's sake, hurtful nevertheless they may prove, as well in regard of their fitness to serve the turn of hereticks and such as privily will venture to instil their poison into new minds. Hooker.

Some, who have not deserved judgment of death, have been for their goods sake caught up and carried straight to the bough: a thing indeed very pitiful and horrible. Spenser.

2. Above common rate. This use is emphatical.

Then did'st thou utter, I am yours for ever;
'Tis grace indeed. Shakspeare.

Borrows in mean affairs, his subjects pains;
But things of weight and consequence indeed,
Himself doth in his chamber then debate. Davies.

Such sons of Abraham, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed. South.

I were a beast, indeed, to do you wrong,
I who have lov'd and honour'd you so long. Dryd.

3. This is to be granted that. A particle of connexion.

This limitation, indeed, of our author will save those the labour who would look for Adam's heir amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next heir amongst men. Locke.

Some sons indeed, some very few we see
Who keep themselves from this infection free.
Dryden.

There is nothing in the world more generally dreaded, and yet less to be feared than death; indeed, for those unhappy men whose hopes terminate in this life, no wonder if the prospect of another seems terrible and amazing. Wake.

4. It is used sometimes as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable, and though some degree of obscure power is perceived, might, even where it is properly enough inserted, be omitted without miss.

I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; tho' indeed I had no reason so to think. Bacon.

There is indeed no great pleasure in visiting these magazines of war, after one has seen two or three of them. Addison.

5. It is used to note concession in comparisons.

Against these forces were prepared to the number of near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion.
Bacon's War with Spain.

INDEFA'TIGABLE, în-dê-fât'tê-gâ-bl. adj. [indefatigabilis, in and defatigo, Latin.] Unwearied; not tired; not exhausted by labour.

Who shall spread his airy flight,
Upborne with indefatigable wings,
Over the vast abrupt. Milton.

The ambitious person must rise early and sit up late, and pursue his design with a constant indefatigable attendance; he must be infinitely patient and servile. South.

INDEFA'TIGABLY, în-dê-fât'tê-gâ-blê. adv. [from indefatigable.] Without weariness.

A man indefatigably zealous in the service of the church and state, and whose writings have highly deserved of both. Dryden.

So indefeisible is our estate in those joys, that if we do not sell it in reversion, we shall, when once invested, be beyond the possibility of ill husbandry.
Decay of Piety.

INDEFE'NSIBLE, în-dê-fên'sê-bl.[439] adj. [in and defensus, Latin.] What cannot be defended, or maintained.

As they extend the rule of consulting scripture to all the actions of common life, even so far as to the taking up of a straw, so it is altogether false or indefensible. Sanderson.

INDE'FINITE, în-dêf'ê-nît.[156] adj. [indefinitus, Latin; indefini, French.]

1. Not determined; not limited; not settled.

Though a position should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite: as ashes are more generative than dust.
Bacon's Essays.

Her advancement was left indefinite; but thus, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had. Bacon.

Tragedy and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epick poem: the time of this last is left indefinite.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits.

Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension. Spectator.

INDE'FINITELY, în-dîf'ê-nît-lê. adv. [from indefinite.]

1. Without any settled or determinate limitation.

We observe that custom, whereunto St. Paul alludeth, and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to shew indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance. Hooker.

We conceive no more than the letter beareth; that is four times, or indefinitely more than thrice.
Brown.

A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged upon some occasions, by the express command of God.
Smalridge.

2. To a degree indefinite.

If the word be indefinitely extended, that is, so far as no human intellect can fancy any bounds of it, then what we see must be the least part.
Ray on the Creation.

INDEFI'NITUDE, în-dê-fîn'ê-tûde. n. s. [from indefinite.] Quantity not limited by our understanding, though yet finite.

They arise to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not indefinitude, by their various positions, combinations, and conjunctions. Hale.

INDE'MNITY, în-dêm'nê-tê. n. s. [indemnité, French.] Security from punishment; exemption from punishment.

I will use all means, in the ways of amnesty and indemnity, which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. K. Charles.

To INDE'NT, în-dênt'. v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Latin.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakspeare's As you like it.

The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base, of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.

Trent who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton.

The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. Woodward.

To INDE'NT, în-dênt'. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.

Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
Shakspeare.

He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.

INDE'NT, în-dênt'. n. s. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure; indentation. This is little used.

Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakspeare.

INDENTA'TION, în-dên-tâ'shûn. n. s. [in and dens, Lat.] An indenture; waving in any figure.

The margins do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward.

INDE'NTURE,[461] în-dên'tshûre. n. s. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other; a contract, of which there is a counterpart.

In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham.

The critick to his grief will find
How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

INDEPE'NDENCE, în-dê-pên'dênse. } n. s.
INDEPE'NDENCY, în-dê-pên'dên-sê. } [independence, Fr. in and dependence.] Freedom; exemption from reliance or control: state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independency,
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

INDEPE'NDENT, în-dê-pên'dênt. adj. [independant, French; in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from, before the object; of which on seems more proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superiour cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance: these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

INDEPE'NDENT, în-dê-pên'dênt. n. s. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superiuor authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderson.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPE'NDENTLY, în-dê-pên'dênt-lê. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other. Dryd.

INDESE'RT, în-dê-zêrt'. n. s. [in and desert.] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own indeserts. Addison.

INDE'SINENTLY, în-dês'ê-nênt-lê. adv. [indesinenter, Fr. in and desinio, Lat.] Without cessation.

They continue a month indesinently. Ray.

To I'NDICATE, în'dê-kâte.[91] v. a. [indico, Latin.]

1. To show; to point out.
2. [In physick.] To point out a remedy. See INDICATION.

INDICA'TION, în-dê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [idication, Frencn; indicatio, from indicon Latin.]

1. Mark; token, sign; symptom.

The frequent stops they make in the most convevenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness. Addison.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterbury.

2. [In physick.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative; as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper; curing it while it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Quincy.

The depravation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skilful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him? Bentley.

4. Explanation; display.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

INDI'CATIVE, în-dîk'kâ-tîv.[512] adj. [indicativus, Latin.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.

2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bacon.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterward, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDI'FFERENCE, în-dîf'fêr-ênse. } n. s. [in-
INDI'FFERENCY, în-dif'fêr-ên-sè. } difference, Fr. indifferentia, Lat.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon's Essays.

By an equal indifferency for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true. Locke.

A perfect indifferency in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifferency to act, or not to act, till determined by the will. Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifferency look into the notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifferency and judgment, and thou can'st not but greatly commend it. Whitgift.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance. Addison.

A place which we must pass through not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance o those who travel through the country of an enemy. Rogers.

Indiff'rence, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifferency as he would a piece of public news. Swift.

The people of England should be frighted with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbuthnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

INDI'FFERENT, în-dîf'fêr-ênt. adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifferens, Lat.]

1. Neutral; not determined to either side.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it or no?
——He seems indifferent. Shakspeare.

Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth. Locke.

Let guilt or fear
Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them:
Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die. Addison.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else. Temple.

It was a law of Solon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republick, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment. Addison's Freeholder.

But how indifferent soever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent. Rogers.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary. Hooker.

Customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, became exceedingly evil in this realm by reason of the inconveniences which followed thereupon. Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter which way the learned shall determine. Locke.

4. Impartial; disinterested.

Metcalf was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, and a father to every one. Ascham.

I am a most poor woman and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indiff'rent, and no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Shakspeare.

There can hardly be an indifferent trial had between the king and the subject, or between party and party, by reason of this general kindred and consanguinity. Davies.

5. Passable; having mediocrity; of a middling state; neither good nor worst. This is an improper and colloquial use, especially when applied to persons.

Some things admit of mediocrity:
A counsellor, or pleader at the bar,
May want Messala's pow'rful eloquence,
Or be less read than deep Casselius;
Yet this indiff'rent lawyer is esteem'd. Roscommon.

Who would excel, when few can make a test,
Betwixt indiff'rent writing and the best? Dryden.

This has obliged me to publish an indifferent collection of poems, for fear of being thought the author of a worse. Prior.

There is not one of these subjects that would not sell a very indifferent paper, could I think of gratifying the publick by such mean and base methods. Addison.

6. In the same sense it has the force of an adverb.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better that my mother had not born me. Shakspeare.

This will raise a great scum on it, and leave your wine indifferent clear. Mortimer.

INDI'FFERENTLY, în-dîf'fêr-ênt-lè. adv. [indifferenter, Lat.]

1. Without distinction; without preference.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton.

Were pardon extended indifferently to all, which of them would think himself under any particular obligation. Addison.

Though a church-of-England-man thinks every species of government equally lawful, he does not think them equally expedient, or for every country indifferently. Swift.

2. Equally; impartially.

They may truly and indifferently minister justice. Common Prayer.

3. In a neutral state; without wish or aversion.

Set honour in one eye, and death i' th' other,
And I will look on death indifferently. Shakspeare.

4. Not well; tolerably; passably; middlingly.

A moyle will draw indifferently well, and carry great burthens. Carew.

I hope it may indifferently entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rowe.

INDISSO'LVABLE, în-dîz-zôl'vâ-bl. adj. [in and dissolvable.]

1. Indissoluble; not separable as to its parts.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissolvable in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

2. Obligatory; not to be broken; binding for ever.

Deposition and degradation are without hope of any remission, and therefore the law stiles them an indissolvable bond; but a censure, a dissolvable bond. Ayliffe.

INDISSOLUBI'LITY, în-dîs-sô-lû-bil'ê-tê. n. s. [indissolubilité, French; from indissoluble.]

1. Resistance to a dissolving power; firmness; stableness.

What hoops hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together from whence steel has its firmness, and the parts of a diamond their hardness and indissolubility? Locke.

2. Perpetuity of obligation.

INDI'SSOLUBLE, în-dîs'sô-lû-bl. adj. [indissoluble, French; indissolubilis, Latin; in and dissoluble.]

1. Resisting all separation of its parts; firm; stable.

When common gold and lead are mingled, the lead may be severed almost unaltered; yet if, instead of the gold, a tantillum of the red elixir be mingled with the saturn, their union will be so indissoluble, that there is no possible way of separating the diffused elixir from the fixed lead. Boyle.

2. Binding for ever; subsisting for ever; not to be loosed.

Far more comfort it were for us, to be joined with you in bands of indissoluble love and amity, to live as if our persons being many, our souls were but one. Hooker.

There is the supreme and indissoluble consanguinity between men, of which the heathen poet saith we are all his generation. Bacon.

They might justly wonder, that men so taught, so obliged to be kind to all, should behave themselves so contrary to such heavenly instructions, such indissoluble obligations. South.

INDI'SSOLUBLENESS, în-dîs'sô-lû-bl-nês. n. s. [from indissoluble.] Indissolubility; resistance to separation of parts.

Adam, though consisting of a composition intrinsically dissolvable, might have held, by the divine will, a state of immortality and indissolubleness of his composition. Hale.

INDI'SSOLUBLY, în-dîs'sô-lû-blê. adv. [from indissoluble.]

1. In a manner resisting all separation.

On they move
Indissolubly firm; nor obvious hill,
Nor strait'ning vale, nor wood, nor stream divide
Their perfect ranks. Milton.

The remaining ashes, by a further degree of fire, may be indissolubly united into glass. Boyle.

They willingly unite,
Indissolubly firm; from Dubris south
To northern Orcades. Philips.

2. For ever obligatorily.

INDISTI'NCT, în-dîs-tînkt'. adj. [indistinct, French; in and distinctus, Lat.]

1. Not plainly marked; confused.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought,
The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakspeare.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note:
But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear. Dryd.

When we speak of the infinite divisibility of matter, we keep a very clear and distinct idea of division and divisibility; but when we come to parts too small for our senses, our ideas of these little bodies become obscure and indistinct. Watts.

2. Not exactly discerning.

We throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Ev'n till we make the main and th' ærial blue
An indistinct regard. Shaksp.

INDISTI'NCTION, în-dîs-tînk'shûn. n. s. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusion; uncertainty.

The indistinction of many of the same name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another hath made some doubt. Brown.

2. Omission of discrimination; indiscrimination.

An indistinction of all persons, or equality of all orders, is far from being agreeable to the will of God. Sprat.

INDISTI'NCTLY, în-dîs-tînkt'lè. adv. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusedly; uncertainly; without definiteness or discrimination.

In its sides it was bounded distinctly, but on its ends confusedly and indistinctly, the light there vanishing by degrees. Newton.

2. Without being distinguished.

Making trial thereof, both the liquors soaked indistinctly through the bowl. Brown.

INDISTI'NCTNESS, în-dîs-tînkt'nès. n. s. [from indistinct.] Confusion; uncertainty; obscurity.

There is unevenness or indistinctness in the style of these places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline humour grow flatter; so that the light, for want of sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it, and by consequence paint in the bottom of the eye a confused picture: and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused. Newton.

INDISTU'RBANCE, în-dîs-tûr'bânse. n. s. [in and disturb.] Calmness; freedom from disturbance.

What is called by the stoicks apathy, and by the scepticks indisturbance, seems all but to mean great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

INDIVI'DUAL, în-dè-vîd'ù-âl, or în-dè-vîd jù-âl.[463 293 294 376] adj. [individu, individuel, French; individuus, Lat.]

1. Separate from others of the same species; single; numerically one.

Neither is it enough to consult, secundum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shewn in the choice of individuals. Bacon.

They present us with images more perfect than the life of any individual. Dryden.

Must the whole man, amazing thought! return
To the cold marble, or contracted urn!
And never shall those particles agree,
That were in life this individual be? Prior.

Know all the good that individuals find,
Lies in three words, health, peace, and competence. Pope.

We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination. Pope.

It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.

The object of any particular idea is called an individual: so Peter is an individual man, London is an individual city. Watts.

2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjoined.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear. Milton.

Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.

Under his great vicegerent reign abide
United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milton.

INDIVIDUA'LITY, în-dè-vîd-ù-âl'è-tè. n. s. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.

He would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular: that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said, that a man is not the same he was, and that madmen are beside themselves. Arbuthnot.

INDIVI'DUALLY, în-dè-vîd'ù-âl-è. adv. [from individual.]

1. With separate or distinct existence; numerically.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it? Hooker.

2. Not separably; incommunicably.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakewill on Providence.

To INDIVI'DUATE, în-dè-vîd'ù-âte. v. a. [from individuus, Latin.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. More.

No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and individuate him from all other writers. Dryden.

INDIVIDUA'TION, în-dè-vîd-ù-â'shûn. n. s. [from individuate.] That which makes an individual.

What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.

INDIVIDU'ITY, în-dè-vîd-ù'è-tè. n. s. [from individuus, Latin.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.

INDIVI'NITY, în-dè-vîn'è-tè. n. s. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power. Not in use.

How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Crœsus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency? Brown.

INDIVISIBI'LITY, în-dè-vîz-è-bil'è-tè.[562] } INDIVI'SIBLENESS, în-dè-vîz'è-bl-nès. } n. s. [from indivisible.] State in which no more division can be made.

A pestle and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician. Locke.

INDIVI'SIBLE, în-dè-vîz'è-bl. adj. [indivisible, French; in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller; having reached the last degree of divisibility.

By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.

Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden.

INDIVI'SIBLY, în-dè-vîz'è-blè. adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.

INDO'CIBLE, în-dôs'è-bl. adj. [in and docile.] Unteachable; insusceptible of instruction.

INDO'CIL, în-dôs'sîl.[503 509 511 537] adj. [indocile, French; indocilis, Latin.] Unteachable; incapable of being instructed.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indocil, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself. Bentley.

INDOCI'LITY, în-dô-sîl'è-tè. n. s. [indocilité, Fr. in and docility.] Unteachableness; refusal of instruction.

To INDO'CTRINATE, în-dôk'trè-nâte.[91] v. a. [endoctriner, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.

Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indoctrinating his young unexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently. Clarendon.

They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indoctrinated, are strongly assured of the truth of their receptions. Glanville.

INDOCTRINA'TION, în-dôk-trè-nâ'shûn. n. s. [from indoctrinate.] Instruction; information.

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior indoctrinations, yet are these authorities not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Brown.

I'NDOLENCE, în'dò-lênse. } I'NDOLENCY, în'dò-lèn-sè. } n. s. [in and doleo, Lat. indolence, French.]

1. Freedom from pain.

As there must be indolency where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency. Burnet.

I have ease, if it may not rather be called indolence. Hough.

2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.

Let Epicures give indolency as an attribute to his gods, and place it in the happiness of the blest: the Divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.

The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Bolingbroke.

I'NDOLENT, în'dò-lênt. adj. [French.]

They lie indrench'd. Shakspeare.

INDU'BIOUS, în-dû'bè-ûs. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.

Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposing an indubious confidence in those antipestilential spirits. Harvey.

INDU'BITABLE, în-dû'bè-tâ-bl. adj. [indubitabilis, Lat. indubitable, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable; evident; certain in appearance; clear; plain.

When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge. Watts.

INDU'BITABLY, în-dû'bè-tâ-blè. adv. [from indubitable.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.

If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Wotton.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities. Sprat.

I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Bentley.

INDU'BITATE, ĭn dū'bē-tāte.[91] adj. [indubitatus, Lat.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the indubitate heirs of the crown. Bacon.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line. Wotton.

To INDU'CE, ĭn-dūse'. v. a. [induire, French; induco, Lat.]

1. To influence to any thing; to persuade: of persons.

The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hooker.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.

Desire with thee still longer to converse Induc'd me. Bacon.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence: of things.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon.

As belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce; to effect.

Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.

Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbuthnot.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce; to effect gradually.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDU'CEMENT, ĭn-dūse'mĕnt. n. s. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.

The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered further reason. Hooker.

Many inducements, besides scripture, may lead me to that, which if scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade. Hooker.

That mov'd me to 't,
Then mark th' inducement. Shaksp.

He lives
Higher degree of life: inducement strong
For us. Milton.

My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to find my son. Milton.

Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.

INDU'CER, ĭn-dū'sŭr.[98] n. s. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.

The ceremonies in the gathering were first inducted by the Venetians. Sandys.

2. To put into actual possession of a benefice.

If a person thus instituted, though not inducted, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDU'CTION, ĭn-dŭk'shŭn. n. s. [induction, French; inductio, Latin.]

1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface.

These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosp'rous hope. Shaksp.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelation; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts' Logick.

The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general: and if no exception occur from phænomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.

INDU'CTIVE, ĭn-dŭk'tĭv. adj. [from induct.]

1. Leading; persuasive: with to.

A brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton.

2. Capable to infer or produce.

Abatements may take away infallible concludency in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale.

3. Proceeding not by demonstration, but induction.

To INDU'E, ĭn-dū'. v. a. [induo, Latin.]

1. To invest; to clothe.

One first matter all,
Indu'd with various forms. Milton.

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with endow or indow, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.

The angel, by whom God indu'd the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.

His pow'rs, with dreadful strength indu'd. Chapman.

To INDU'LGE, ĭn-dŭlje'. v. a. [indulgeo, Latin.]

1. To encourage by compliance.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep;
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryd.

2. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, it has in: as he indulged himself with a draught of wine; and, he indulged himself in shameful drunkenness.

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. Locke.

To live like those that have their hope in an another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

3. To grant not of right but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors. Taylor.

The virgin ent'ring bright, indulg'd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away. Dryden.

But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden.

My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atrides. Pope.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Pope.

To INDU'LGE, ĭn-dŭlje. v. n. [a latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence: with to.

He must, by indulging to one sort of reproveable discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest. Government of the Tongue.

INDU'LGENCY, ĭn-dŭl'jĕn-sē. } gence, Fr. from indulge.]

1. Fondness; fond kindness.

Restraint she will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.

The glories of our isle,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryden.

2. Forbearance; tenderness; opposite to rigour.

They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less. Hammond.

In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as th' indulgence less. Pope.

3. Favour granted; liberality.

If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.

4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin,
I'll canvass thee. Shakspeare.

Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.

In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but profit. Decay of Piety.

Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Atterbury.

INDU'LGENT, ĭn-dŭl'jĕnt. adj. [indulgent, French; indulgens, Latin.]

1. Kind; gentle; liberal.

God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.

2. Mild; favourable.

Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be
Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to: with of.

The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryden.

INDU'LGENTLY, ĭn-dŭl'jĕnt-lė. adv. [from indulgent.] Without severity; without censure; without self-reproach; with indulgence.

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hammond.

INDU'LT, ĭn-dŭlt'. } n. s. [Italian and

Some friends to vice industriously defend
These innocent diversions, and pretend
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame.
Dryden's Juvenal.

I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

I'NDUSTRY, ĭn'dŭs-trė. n. s. [industrie, French; industria, Latin.] Diligence; assiduity; habitual or actual laboriousness.

The sweat of industry would dry and die,
But for the end it works to. Shakspeare.

See the laborious bee
For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble sweets content her industry.
Cowley.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. More.

To INE'BRIATE, ĭn-ē'brė-āte.[91] v. a. [inebrio, Latin.] To intoxicate; to make drunk.

Wine sugared inebriateth less than wine pure: sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon.

Fish entering far in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Sandys.

To INE'BRIATE, ĭn-ē'brė-āte. v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.

At Constantinople, fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon.

INEBRIA'TION, ĭn-ē-brė-ā'shŭn. n. s. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.

INEFFABI'LITY, ĭn-ĕf-fā-bĭl'ė-tė. n. s. [from ineffable.] Unspeakableness.

INE'FFABLE, ĭn-ĕf'fā-bl.[405] adj. [ineffable, French; ineffabilis, Latin.] Unspeakable; unutterable: not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the Son, with calm aspect, and clear,
Light'ning divine, ineffable, serene!

The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked; and suffering even those, out of a conscience of their guilt, to grow more wicked. Clarendon.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overspread the infatuated gentile world: a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples. Hammond.

May hypocrites,
That slily speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd, 'till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose. Philips.

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it. Addison.

The carriage of our athiests or deists is amazing: no dotage so infatuate, no phrenzy so extravagant as theirs. Bentley.

INFATUA'TION, ĭn-fâtsh-ù-â'shŭn. n. s. [from infatuate.] The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests, and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuation. South.

INFAU'STING, ĭn-fâws'tĭng. n. s. [from infaustus, Latin.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so did he not observe, that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infausting upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Bacon.

INFE'ASIBLE, ĭn-fē'zĕ-bl. adj. [in and feasible.] Impracticable; not to be done.

This is so difficult and infeasible, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science. Glanville.

To INFE'CT, ĭn-fĕkt'. v. a. [infecter, Fr. infectus, Latin.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Shakspeare.

The nature of bad news infects the teller. Shaksp.

Every day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the sceptre his. Shakspeare.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakspeare.

She speaks poignards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. Shakspeare.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Then when I parted hence. Shakspeare.

The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat. Milton.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them! Shaksp.

INFE'CTION, ĭn-fĕk'shŭn. n. s. [infection, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from the distempered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they come from. Quincy.

What a strange infection,
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shaksp.

The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you
Do climate here. Shaksp.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self. Shaksp.

Hence,
Lest that th' infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Shaksp.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all. Bacon.

INFE'CTIOUS, ĭn-fĕk'shŭs. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee. Shak.

In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign. Shaksp.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilencies and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell. Temple.

INFE'CTIOUSLY, ĭn-fĕk'shŭs-lĕ. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects. Shaksp.

INFE'CTIOUSNESS, ĭn-fĕk'shŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INFE'CTIVE, ĭn-fĕk'tĭv. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Sidney.

INFECU'ND, ĭn-fĕk'ŭnd. n. s. [infœcundus, Latin.] Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham.

INFECU'NDITY, ĭn-fē-kŭn-dē-tĕ. n. s. [infœcunditas, Latin.] Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELI'CITY, ĭn-fē-lĭs'sē-tĕ. n. s. [infelicité, Fr. infelicitas, Latin.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy. Glanville.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

To INFE'R, ĭn-fĕr'. v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero, Latin.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs. Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker and infer

Thee also happier, shall not be with-held
Thy hearing. Milton.

Great,
Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glistering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.
Milton.

One would wonder how, from so different premises, they should all infer the same conclusion.
Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shaksp.

I'NFERENCE, în'fêr-ênse. n. s. [inference, French; from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glanville.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFE'RIBLE, în-fêr'rê-bl. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferible from their premises. Brown.

INFERIO'RITY, în-fê-rê-ôr'ê-tê. n. s. [infériorité, Fr. from inferiour.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFE'RIOUR, în-fê'rê-ûr.[314] adj. [inferior, Latin; inférieur, French.]

1. Lower in place.
2. Lower in station or rank of life: correlative to superiour.

Render me more equal, or perhaps
Superiour, for inferiour who is free? Milton.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,
And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour, to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions.
Watts.

INFE'RIOUR, în-fê'rê-ûr. n. s. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdaining him. South.

INFE'RNAL, în-fêr'nâl. adj. [infernal, Fr. infernus, Latin.] Hellish; tartarean; detestable.

His gigantick limbs with large embrace,
Infolds nine acres of infernal space. Dryden.

INFE'RNAL Stone, în-fêr'nâl-stône'. n. s.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill.

INFE'RTILE, în-fêr'tîl.[140] adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, and infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable.
Government of the Tongue.

INFERTI'LITY, în-fêr-tîl'ê-tê. n. s. [infertilité, French; from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The same distemperature of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome. Hale.

To INFE'ST, în-fêst'. v. a. [infester, Fr. infesto, Lat.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.

Unto my feeble breast
Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou do'st infest,
And hearts of greatest heroes do'st enrage. Spenser.

They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause. Hooker.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired. Hooker.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his. Bacon.

Envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions, infest human life. Addison.

No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects. Arbuthnot.

INFESTI'VITY, în-fês-tîv'ê-tê. n. s. [in and festivity.] Mournfulness; want of cheerfulness.

INFE'STRED, în-fês'tûr'd. adj. [in and fester.] Rankling; inveterate. Obsolete.

This cursed creature, mindful of that old
Infestred grudge, the which his mother felt,
So soon as Clarion he did behold,
His heart with vengeful malice inly swelt. Spenser.

INFEUDA'TION, în-fû-dâ'shûn. n. s. [in and feudum, Latin.] The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infeudation of the tenant, and was usually called knight's service. Hale.

I'NFIDEL, în'fê-dêl. n. s. [infidelle, Fr. infidelis, Lat.] An unbeliever; a miscreant; a pagan; one who rejects christianity.

Exhorting her, if she did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world. Hooker.

INFIDE'LITY, în-fê-dêl'ê-tê. n. s. [infidelité, Fr. infidelitas, Lat.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity.
Taylor.

2. Disbelief of christianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it. Addison.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other; the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

I'NFINITE, în'fê-nît. adj. [infini, French; infinitus, Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What 's time, when on eternity we think?
A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
Time 's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controuls
The inward bent and motion of our souls!
Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease? Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought;
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

I'NFINITELY, în'fê-nît-lê. adv. [from infinite.]

1. Without limits; without bounds; immensely.

Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

2. In a great degree.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound. Shaksp.

The king saw that contrariwise it would follow, that England, though much less in territory, yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than those other nations have. Bacon.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

I'NFINITENESS, în'fê-nît-nês. n. s. [from infinite.] Immensity; boundlesness; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his almightiness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weaknesses. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL, în-fê-nê-tês'sê-mâl. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFI'NITIVE, în-fîn'ê-tîv. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Lat.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke.

INFI'NITUDE, în-fîn'ê-tûde. n. s. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd. Milton.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the incompossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that incompossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions.
Addison.

INFI'NITY, în-fîn'ê-tê. n. s. [infinité, Fr. infinitas, Latin.]

1. Immensity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one: for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and bliss. Hooker.

2. Endless number. A hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broome.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbuthnot.

INFI'RM, în-fêrm'.[108] adj. [infirme, French; infirmus, Latin.]

1. Weak; feeble; disabled of body.

Here stand I your brave;
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man. Shak.

2. Weak of mind; irresolute.

I am afraid to think what I have done:
Look on 't again, I dare not.
——Infirm of purpose;
Give me the dagger. Shaksp.

That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty, and infirmer sex, forgiv'n;
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. Not stable; not solid.

He who fixes upon false principles, treads upon infirm ground, and so sinks; and he who fails in his deductions from right principles, stumbles upon firm ground, and falls. South.

To INFI'RM, în-fêrm'. v. a. [infirmer, Fr. infirmo, Latin.] To weaken; to shake; to enfeeble. Not in use.

Some contrary spirits will object this as a sufficient reason to infirm all those points. Raleigh.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown.

INFI'RMARY, în-fêr'mâ-rê. n. s. [infirmerie, French.] Lodgings for the sick.

These buildings to be for privy lodgings on both sides, and the end for privy galleries, whereof one should be for an infirmary, if any special person should be sick. Bacon.

INFI'RMITY, în-fêr'mê-tê. n. s. [infirmité, French.]

1. Weakness of sex, age, or temper.

Infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability. Shaksp.

Discover thine infirmity,
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege:
I am with child, ye bloody homicides. Shaksp.

If he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worships to think it was his infirmities. Shaksp.

Are the infirmities of the body, pains, and diseases his complaints? His faith reminds him of the day when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. Rogers.

2. Failing; weakness; fault.

A friend should bear a friend's infirmities;
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Shaksp.

Many infirmities made it appear more requisite, that a wiser man should have the application of his interest. Clarendon.

How difficult is it to preserve a great name, when he that has acquired it is so obnoxious to such little weaknesses and infirmities, as are no small diminution to it. Addison.

3. Disease; malady.

General laws are like general rules of physick, according whereunto, as now, no wise man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard that thereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident may. Hooker.

Sometimes the races of man may be depraved by the infirmities of birth. Temple.

INFI'RMNESS, în-fêrm'nês. n. s. [from infirm.] Weakness; feebleness.

Some experiments may discover the infirmness and insufficiency of the peripatetick doctrine. Boyle.

To INFI'X, în-fîks'. v. a. [infixus, Latin.] To drive in; to set; to fasten.

And at the point two stings infixed are,
Both deadly sharp, that sharpest steel exceeden far. Spenser.

I never lov'd myself,
'Till now, infixed, I behold myself,
Drawn in the flatt'ring table of her eye. Shaksp.

Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round. Milton.

That sting infix'd within her haughty mind,
And her proud heart with secret sorrow pin'd. Dryden.

The fatal dart a ready passage found,
And deep within her heart infix'd the wound. Dryden.

To INFLA'ME, în-flâme'. v. a. [inflammo, Latin.]

1. To kindle; to set on fire; to make to burn.

Love more clear, dedicated to a love more cold, with the clearness lays a night of sorrow upon me, and with the coldness inflames a world of fire within me. Sidney.

Its waves of torrent fire inflam'd with rage. Milt.

2. To kindle any passion.

Their lust was inflam'd towards her. Susannah.

A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes. Addison.

5. To heat the body morbidly with obstructed matter.

6. To provoke; to irritate.

A little vain curiosity weighs so much with us, or the church's peace so little, that we sacrifice the one to the whetting and inflaming of the other. Decay of Piety.

To INFLA'ME, în-flâme'. v. n. To grow hot, angry, and painful by obstructed matter.

If the vesiculæ are opprest, they inflame. Wiseman.

INFLA'MER, în-flâ'mûr. n. s. [from inflame.] The thing or person that inflames.

Interest is a great inflamer, and sets a man on persecution under the colour of zeal. Addison.

Assemblies, who act upon publick principles, proceed upon influence from particular leaders and inflamers. Swift.

INFLAMMABI'LITY, în-flâm-mâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [from inflammable.] The quality of catching fire.

This it will do, if the ambient air be impregnate with subtile inflammabilities. Brown.

Choler is the most inflammable part of the blood; whence, from its inflammability, it is called a sulphur. Harvey.

INFLA'MMABLE, în-flâm'mâ-bl. adj. [Fr.] Easy to be set on flame; having the quality of flaming.

The juices of olives, almonds, nuts, and pine-apples, are all inflammable. Bacon.

Licetus thinks it possible to extract an inflammable oil from the stone asbestos. Wilkins.

Out of water grow all vegetable and animal substances, which consist as well of sulphureous, fat, and inflammable parts, as of earthy and alcalizate ones. Newton.

Inflammable spirits are subtile volatile liquors, which come over in distillation, miscible with water, and wholly combustible. Arbuthnot.

INFLA'MMABLENESS, în-flâm'mâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from inflammable.] The quality of easily catching fire.

We may treat of the inflammableness of bodies. Boyle.

INFLAMMA'TION, în-flâm-mâ'shûn. n. s. [inflammatio, Latin; inflammation, Fr.]

1. The act of setting on flame.

Inflammations of air from meteors, may have a powerful effect upon men. Temple.

2. The state of being in flame.

The flame extendeth not beyond the inflammable effluence, but closely adheres unto the original of its inflammation. Brown.

Some urns have had inscriptions on them expressing that the lamps within them were burning when they were first buried: whereas the inflammation of fat and viscous vapours doth presently vanish. Wilkins' Dædalus.

3. [In chirurgery.] Inflammation is when the blood is obstructed so as to crowd in a greater quantity into any particular part, and gives it a greater colour and heat than usual. Quincy.

If that bright spot stay in his place, it is an inflammation of the burning. Leviticus.

4. The act of exciting fervour of mind.

Prayer kindleth our desire to behold God by speculation, and the mind, delighted with that contemplative sight of God, taketh every where new inflammations to pray the riches of the mysteries of heavenly wisdom, continually stirring up in us correspondent desires towards them. Hooker.

INFLA'MMATORY, în-flâm'mâ-tûr-ê.[512] adj. [from inflame.] Having the power of inflaming.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities: such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Arbuthnot.

An inflammatory fever hurried him out of this life in three days. Pope to Swift.

To INFLA'TE, în-flâte'. v. a. [inflatus, Latin.]

Vapours are no other than inflated vesiculæ of water. Derham.

2. To fill with the breath.

With might and main they chas'd the murd'rous fox,
With brazen trumpets and inflated box,
To kindle Mars with military sounds,
Nor wanted horns t' inspire sagacious hounds. Dryd.

INFLA'TION, în-flâ'shûn. n. s. [inflatio, Lat. from inflate.] The state of being swelled with wind; flatulence.

Wind coming upwards, inflations and tumours of the belly, are signs of a phlegmatick constitution. Arbuthnot on Diet.

To INFLE'CT, în-flêkt'. v. a. [inflecto, Latin.]

1. To bend; to turn.

What makes them this one way their race direct,
While they a thousand other ways reject?
Why do they never once their course inflect? Blackmore.

Do not the rays of light which fall upon bodies, begin to bend before they arrive at the bodies? And are they not reflected, refracted, and inflected by one and the same principle, acting variously in various circumstances? Newton's Opticks.

2. To vary a noun or verb in its terminations.

INFLE'CTION, în-flĕk'shŭn. n. s. [inflectio, Latin.]

1. The act of bending or turning.

Neither the divine determinations, persuasions, or inflections of the understanding or will of rational creatures, doth deceive the understanding, pervert the will, or necessitate either to any moral evil. Hale.

2. Modulation of the voice.

His virtue, his gesture, his countenance, his zeal, the motion of his body, and the inflection of his voice, who first uttereth them as his own, is that which giveth the very essence of instruments available to eternal life. Hooker.

3. Variation of a noun or verb.

The same word in the original tongue, by divers inflections and variations, makes divers dialects. Brerewood.

INFLE'CTIVE, în-flĕk'tĭv. adj. [from inflect.] Having the power of bending.

This inflective quality of the air is a great incumbrance and confusion of astronomical observations. Derham.

INFLEXIBI'LITY, în-flĕks-ĕ-bĭl'ĕ-tĕ. } n. s.

My constancy I to the planets give;
My truth, to them who at the court do live;
Mine ingenuity and openness
To jesuits; to buffoons my pensiveness. Donne.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to descend to so base, so ignoble a vice. Gov. of the Tongue.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confess, you must commend his ingenuity, and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [from ingenious.] Wit; invention; genius; subtilty; acuteness.

These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of manly ingenuities. Brown.

The ancient atomical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Glanville.

Such sots have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fineness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtile speculations. Woodward.

INGE'NUOUS, în-jên'nû-ûs. adj. [ingenuus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble.

Many speeches there are of Job's, whereby his wisdom and other virtues may appear; but the glory of an ingenuous mind he hath purchased by these words only, Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument; yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed. Hooker.

Infuse into their young breasts such an ingenuous and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned. Milton.

If an ingenuous detestation of falsehood be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Locke.

2. Freeborn; not of servile extraction.

Subjection, as it preserves property, peace, and safety, so it will never diminish rights nor ingenuous liberties. King Charles.

INGRA'TEFUL, ĭn-grāte'fŭl. } tus, Latin; ingrat, French.] Ingrate is proper, but ingrateful less proper than ungrateful.

1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather
Than pity note how much. Shaksp.
And you degen'rate, you ingrate revolts. Shaksp.
So will fall
He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?
Whose but his own? Ingrate, he had of me
All he could have: I made him just and right,
Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall. Milt.
Perfidious and ingrate!
His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state. Pope.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is unpleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight. Bacon.
He gives no ingrateful food. Milton.

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such ingratiatings with the people. King Charles.

Their managers make them see armies in the air, and give them their word, the more to ingratiate themselves with them, that they signify nothing less than future slaughter and desolation. Addison.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spectator.

INGRA'TITUDE, ĭn-grăt'tē-tūde. n. s. [ingratitude, French; in and gratitude.] Retribution of evil for good; unthankfulness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea-monster. Shaksp.
Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Estrange.
Nor was it with ingratitude return'd,
In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;
One joy possessed 'em both, and in one grief they mourn'd. Dryden.

INGRE'DIENT, ĭn-grē'jĕnt.[204] n. s. [ingredient, French; ingrediens, Latin.]

1. Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardest to come by is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon.
So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,
Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.
By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton.
I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison.
Parts, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a public character. Rogers.
Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbuthnot.

The fragrant murmurs of the western gale. Pope.

There sits the shepherd on the grassy turf,
Inhaling healthful the descending sun. Thomson.

INHARMO'NIOUS, în-hâr-mô'né-ûs. adj. [in and harmonious.] Unmusical; not sweet of sound.

Catullus, though his lines be rough, and his numbers inharmonious, I could recommend for the softness and delicacy, but must decline for the looseness, of his thoughts. Felton.

The identity of sound may appear a little inharmonious, and shock the ear. Broome.

To INHE'RE, în-hêre'. v. n. [inhæreo, Lat.] To exist in something else.

For, nor in nothing, nor in things
Extreme and scattering bright, can love inhere. Donne.

They do but inhere in their subject which supports them; their being is a dependance on a subject. Digby.

INHE'RENT, în-hê'rênt. adj. [inherent, Fr. inhærens, Lat.]

1. Existing in something else, so as to be inseparable from it.

I will not do 't,
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth;
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness. Shaksp.

2. Naturally conjoined; innate; inborn.

I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office: I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone; and a power to be so drawn is a part of the complex one of iron; which powers pass for inherent qualities. Locke.

Animal oil is various according to principles inherent in it. Arbuthnot.

They will be sure to decide in favour of themselves, and talk much of their inherent right. Swift.

The ideas of such modes can no more be subsistent, than the idea of redness was just now found to be inherent in the blood, or that of whiteness in the brain. Bentley.

The obligations we are under of distinguishing ourselves as much by an inherent and habitual, as we are already distinguished by an external and relative holiness. Bentley.

To INHE'RIT, în-hêr'rît. v. a. [enheriter, French.]

1. To receive or possess by inheritance.

Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shaksp.

Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd doth inherit pain. Shaksp.

Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, sterile land, manured with excellent good store of fertile sherris. Shaksp.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Matthew.

The son can receive from his father, good things, without empire, that was vested in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke.

We must know how the first ruler from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it, and inherit it from him. Locke.

Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inheriting, he formed delays. Addison.

2. To possess; to obtain possession of: in Shakspeare. Not used.

He, that had wit, would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it. Titus Andronicus.

INHE'RITABLE, în-hêr'rît-â-bl. adj. [from inherit.] Transmissible by inheritance; obtainable by succession.

A kind of inheritable estate accrued unto them. Carew.

By the ancient laws of the realm, they were not inheritable to him by descent. Hayward.

Was the power the same, and from the same original in Moses as it was in David? And was it inheritable in one and not in the other? Locke.

INHE'RITANCE, în-hêr'rît-ânse. n. s. [from inherit.]

1. Patrimony; hereditary possession.

When the son dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Shakspeare.

Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Genesis.

Claim our just inheritance of old. Milton.

O dear, unhappy babe! must I bequeath thee
Only a sad inheritance of woe?
Gods! cruel gods! can't all my pains atone,
Unless they reach my infant's guiltless head? Smith.

2. The reception of possession by hereditary right.

Men are not proprietors of what they have merely for themselves, their children have a title to part of it, which comes to be wholly theirs, when death has put an end to their parents' use of it; and this we call inheritance. Locke.

3. In Shakspeare, possession.

You will rather show our general lowts
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin. Coriolanus.

INHE'RITOR, în-hêr'rît-ûr.[189] n. s. [from inherit.] An heir; one who receives any thing by succession.

You, like a letcher, out of whorish loins,
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shaksp.

The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? Shaksp.

Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents' inheritance. Bacon.

And 'gainst an injurer, the revenge is just. Ben Jonson.

The upright judge will countenance right, and discountenance wrong, whoever be the injurer or the sufferer. Atterbury.

INJU'RIOUS, în-jû'rè-ûs.[314] adj. [from injury; injurius, Latin; injurieux, Fr.]

1. Unjust; invasive of another's rights.

Till the injurious Roman did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shakspeare.

Injurious strength would rapine still excuse,
By off'ring terms the weaker must refuse. Dryden.

2. Guilty of wrong or injury.

Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,
After offence returning, to regain
Love once possest. Milton's Agonistes.

3. Mischievous; unjustly hurtful.

Our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault, or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding. Tillotson.

4. Detractory; contumelious; reproachful; wrongful.

A prison, indeed injurious, because a prison, but else well testifying affection, because in all respects as commodious as a prison can be. Sidney.

It is natural for a man, by directing his prayers to an image, to suppose the being he prays to represented by that image: which how injurious, how contumelious must it be to the glorious nature of God! South.

If injurious appellations were of any advantage to a cause, what appellations would those deserve who endeavour to sow the seeds of sedition? Swift.

INJU'RIOUSLY, în-jû'rê-ûs-lê. adv. [from injurious.] Wrongfully; hurtfully with injustice, with contumely.

Nor ought he to neglect the vindication of his character, when it is injuriously attacked. Pope and Gay.

INJU'RIOUSNESS, în-jû'rê-ûs-nês. n. s. [from injurious.] Quality of being injurious.

Some miscarriages might escape, rather through sudden necessities of state, than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression. King Charles.

I'NJURY, în'jû-rê. n. s. [injuria, Latin; injure, French.]

1. Hurt without justice.

The places were acquired by just title of victory; and therefore in keeping of them no injury was offered. Hayward.

Riot ascends above their loftiest tow'rs,
And injury and outrage. Milton.

2. Mischief; detriment.

Many times we do injury to a cause by dwelling upon trifling arguments. Watts's Logick.

3. Annoyance.

Great injuries mice and rats do in the fields. Mortimer.

4. Contumelious language; reproachful appellation. A French mode of speech, not now in use.

Casting off the respects fit to be continued between great kings, he fell to bitter invectives against the French king; and spake all the injuries he could devise of Charles. Bacon.

INJU'STICE, în-jûs'tîs.[142] n. s. [injustice, Fr. injustitia, Lat.] Iniquity; wrong.

Cunning men can be guilty of a thousand injustices without being discovered; or at least without being punished. Swift.

INK, îngk.[408] n. s. [encre, Fr. inchiostro, Italian.]

1. The black liquor with which men write.

Mourn boldly, my ink; for while she looks upon you, your blackness will shine. Sidney.

O! she 's fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again. Shakspeare.

Like madmen they hurl'd stones and ink. Ben Jonson.

Intending to have try'd
The silver favour which you gave,
In ink the shining point I dy'd,
And drench'd it in the sable wave. Waller.

Vitriol is the active or chief ingredient in ink, and no other salt will strike the colour with galls. Brown.

I have found pens blacked almost all over when I had a while carried them about me in a silver ink case. Boyle.

The secretary poured the ink box all over the writings, and so defaced them. Howel.

He that would live clear of envy must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink pot. L'Estrange.

I could hardly restrain them from throwing the ink bottle at one another's heads. Arbuthnot.

2. Ink is used for any liquor with which they write: as, red ink, green ink.

To INK, îngk. v. a. [from the noun.] To black or daub with ink: as, his face is all over inked.

INKHO'RN, îngk'hôrn. n. s. [ink and horn.] A portable case for the instruments of writing, commonly made of horn.

Bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the jail; we are now to examine those men. Shakspeare.

Ere that we will suffer such a prince
To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate,
We, and our wives and children, all will fight. Shakspeare.

What is more frequent than to say, a silver inkhorn? Grew.

I'NKLE, îng'kl.[405] n. s. A kind of narrow fillet; a tape;

Inkles, caddisses, cambricks, lawns: why he songs them over as they were gods and goddesses. Shakspeare.

I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee:
He wist not when the hempen string I drew,
Now mine I quickly doft of inkle blue. Gay.

I'NKLING, îngk'lîng. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from inklincken, to sound within. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, I heard not an inkling.] Hint; whisper; intimation.

Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling what we intend to do, which now we'll shew them in deeds. Shakspeare.

We in Europe, notwithstanding all the remote discoveries and navigations of this last age, never heard of any of the least inkling or glimpse of this island. Bacon's New Atlantis.

They had some inkling of secret messages between the marquis of Newcastle and young Hotham. Clarendon.

Aboard a Corinthian vessel he got an inkling among the ship's crew of a conspiracy. L'Estrange.

I'NKMAKER, îngk'mâ-kûr. n. s. [ink and maker.] He who makes ink.

I'NKY, îngk'ê. adj. [from ink.]

1. Consisting of ink.

England bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of wat'ry Neptune, is bound in with shame,
With inky blots and rotten parchment bonds. Shakspeare.

2. Resembling ink.

The liquor presently began to grow pretty clear and transparent, losing its inky blackness. Boyle.

3. Black as ink.

'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
That can denote me truly. Shakspeare.

I'NLAND, în'lând.[88] adj. [in and land.] Interiour; lying remote from the sea.

In this wide inland sea, that hight by name,
The idle lake, my wand'ring ship I row. Spenser.

Goodly laws, like little inland seas, will carry even ships upon their waters. Spenser.

An old religious uncle of mine was, in his youth, an inland man. Shakspeare.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakspeare.

This person did publish a pamphlet printed in England for a general excise, or inland duty. Swift.

I'NLAND, în'lând. n. s. Interiour or midland parts.

Out of these small beginnings, gotten near to the mountains, did they spread themselves into the inland. Spenser.

They of those marches shall defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shaksp.

The rest were all
Far to th' inland retir'd about the walls
Of Pandæmonium. Milton.

I'NLANDER, în'lân-dûr.[98] n. s. [from inland.] Dweller remote from the sea.

The same name is given unto the inlanders, or midland inhabiters of this island. Brown.

To INLA'PIDATE, în-lâp'ê-dâte. v. a. [in and lapido, Latin.] To make stoney; to turn to stone.

Some natural spring waters will inlapidate wood; so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be turned into a kind of gravelly stone. Bacon.

To INLA'Y, în-lâ'. v. a. [in and lay.]

1. To diversify with different bodies inserted into the ground or substratum.

They are worthy
To inlay heav'n with stars. Shakspeare.

Look, how the floor of heav'n
Is thick inlaid with patens of bright gold. Shaksp.

A sapphire throne, inlaid with pure
Amber, and colours of the show'ry arch. Milton.

The timber bears a great price with the cabinet-makers, when large, for inlaying. Mortimer.

Here clouded canes 'midst heaps of toys are found,
And inlaid tweezer-cases strow the ground. Gay.

2. To make variety by being inserted into bodies; to variegate.

Sea girt isles,
That like to rich and various gems inlay
The unadorned bosom of the deep. Milton.

INLA'Y, în'lâ.[492 498] n. s. [from the verb.] Matter inlaid; matter cut to be inlaid.

Under foot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay,
Broider'd the ground. Milton.

To INLA'W, în-lâw'. v. a. [in and law.] To clear of outlawry or attainder.

It should be a great incongruity to have them to make laws, who themselves were not inlawed. Bacon.

I'NLET, în'lêt. n. s. [in and let.] Passage; place of ingress; entrance.

Doors and windows, inlets of men and of light, I couple together; I find their dimensions brought under one. Wotton.

She through the porch and inlet of each sense
Dropt in ambrosial oils till she reviv'd. Milton.

I desire any one to assign any simple idea, which is not received from one of these inlets. Locke.

A fine bargain indeed, to part with all our commodious ports, which the greater the inlet is are so much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a streight shore. Bentley.

Inlets amongst broken lands and islands. Ellis.

I'NLY, în'lê. adj. [from in.] Interiour; internal; secret.

Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Shakspeare.

I'NLY, în'lê. adv. Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld. Spenser.

I' ve inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Shakspeare.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone,
That beat out life. Milton.

These growing thoughts, my mother soon perceiving
By words at times cast forth, inly rejoic'd. Milton.

The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardour: inly pleas'd to see
His host. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

I'NMATE, în'mâte. n. s. [in and mate.] Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansionhouse, passing in and out by one door. Cowell.

So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd
In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve
Addressed his way. Milton.

There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown,
Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests
Too numerous. Milton.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife:
If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an inmate foe could force us out. Dryd.

I'NMOST, în'môst. adj. [from in and most.] Deepest within; remotest from the surface.

'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shaksp.

Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison.

Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or inmost, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.

He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around
Through all their inmost hollow caves resound.
Pope.

I got into the inmost court. Gulliver.

INN, în. n. s. [ınn, Saxon, a chamber.]

1. A house of entertainment for travellers.

How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney.

Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But after death the trial is to come,
When best shall be to them that lived best.
Fairy Queen.

Now day is spent,
Therefore with me ye may take up your inn.
Fairy Queen.

The west, that glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.
Dryden.

One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Locke.

2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.

Go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of courts: down with them all. Shakspeare.

3. It was anciently used for the town houses in which great men resided when they attended the court.

To INN, în. v. n. [from the noun.] To take up temporary lodging.

In thyself dwell;
Inn any where: continuance maketh hell. Donne.

To INN, în. v. a. To house; to put under cover.

He that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop. Shakspeare.

Howsoever the laws made in that parliament did bear good fruit, yet the subsidy bare a fruit that proved harsh and bitter; all was inned at last into the king's barn. Bacon's Henry VII.

Mow clover or rye-grass, and make it fit to inn.
Mortimer.

INNA'TE, în-nâte'.[91] } adj. [inne, Fr.
INNA'TED, în-nâ'tĕd. } innatus, Latin.]

1. Inborn; ingenerate; natural; not superadded; not adscititious. Innated is not proper.

The Druinian hath been cried up for an innated integrity, and accounted the uprightest dealer on earth. Howel.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the people charm'd.
Dryden.

2. Innate is used in the following passage for inherent. Innate in persons, inherent in things.

Mutual gravitation, or spontaneous attraction, cannot possibly be innate and essential to matter. Bentley.

INNA'TENESS, în-nâte'nĕs. n. s. [from innate.] The quality of being innate.

INNA'VIGABLE, în-nâv'vĕ-gâ-bl. adj. [innavigabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed by sailing.

If you so hard a toil will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake. Dryden.

I'NNER, în'nûr.[98] adj. [from in.] Interiour; not outward.

But th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his inner thought. Spens.

This attracts the soul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns. Milton.

Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America. Addison's Spectator.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part; for the inner part, whereof the papillæ are composed, is muscular. Grew.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch pray'd;
Then to his inner court the guests convey'd. Pope.

I'NNERMOST, în'nûr-môst. adj. [from inner. It seems less proper than inmost.] Remotest from the outward part.

The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings. Newton.

INNHO'LDER, în'hôl-dûr. n. s. [inn and hold.] A man who keeps an inn; an innkeeper.

I'NNINGS, în'nĭngz.[410] n. s. Lands recovered from the sea. Ainsworth.

INNKE'EPER, în'kēēp-ûr. n. s. [inn and keeper.] One who keeps lodgings and provisions for the entertainment of travellers.

Clergymen must not keep a tavern, nor a judge be an innkeeper. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

A factious innkeeper was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Addison's Freeholder.

We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were sound, did not take any notice of the staleness of his provisions. Addison.

I'NNOCENCE, în'nô-sênse. } n. s. [innocence, French; innocentia, Latin.]
I'NNOCENCY, în'nô-sĕn-sè. }

1. Purity from injurious action; untainted integrity.

Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton.

What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a conciousness of its own innocence and integrity! Tillotson.

2. Freedom from guilt imputed.

It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit'st part black. Shakspeare.

If truth and upright innocency fail me,
I'll to the king my master. Shakspeare.

3. Harmlessness; innoxiousness.

The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the first innocency of nature. Burnet's Theory.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.

I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence. Shaksp.

We laugh at the malice of apes, as well as at the innocence of children. Temple.

I'NNOCENT, în'nô-sĕnt. adj. [innocent, French; innocens, Latin.]

1. Pure from mischief.

Something
You may deserve of him through me and wisdom,
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
T' appease an angry god. Shakspeare.

Wreck on innocent frail man his loss. Milton.

2. Free from any particular guilt.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakspeare.

The peasant, innocent of all these ills,
With crooked ploughs the fertile fallow tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills. Dryden.

3. Unhurtful; harmless in effects.

The spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

I'NNOCENT, în'nô-sĕnt. n. s.

1. One free from guilt or harm.

So pure an innocent as that same lamb. F. Q.

Thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye. Shakspeare's Othello.

If murth'ring innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner. Shakspeare.

2. A natural; an ideot.

Innocents are excluded by natural defects. Hooker.

I'NNOCENTLY, în'nô-sĕnt-lè. adv. [from innocent.]

1. Without guilt.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly. South.

2. With simplicity; with silliness or imprudence.

3. Without hurt.

Balls at his feet lay innocently dead. Cowley.

INNO'CUOUS, în-nôk'kû-ûs. adj. [innocuus, Latin.] Harmless in effects.

The most dangerous poisons, skilfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew.

INNO'CUOUSLY, în-nôk'kû-ûs-lè. adv. [from innocuous.] Without mischievous effects.

Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same. Brown.

INNO'CUOUSNESS, în-nôk'kû-ûs-nĕs. n. s. [from innocuous.] Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect on the mind than that which penetrates into a mudwall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Digby.

To I'NNOVATE, în'nô-vâte.[91] v. a. [innover, Fr. innovo, Latin.]

1. To bring in something not known before.

Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniencies. Bacon.

Former things
Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act till then unknown. Dryden.

Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate. Dryden.

2. To change by introducing novelties.

From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship. South.

INNOVA'TION, ĭn-nō-vā'shŭn. n. s. [innovation, French, from innovate.] Change by the introduction of novelty.

The love of things ancient doth argue stayedness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations. Hooker.

It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon.

Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution. Swift.

INNOV'ATOR, ĭn'nō-vā-tŭr.[166] n. s. [innovateur, French; from innovate.]

1. An introducer of novelties.

I attach thee as a traiterous innovator,
A foe to the publick weal. Shakspeare.

He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator: and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end? Bacon's Essays.

2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.

He counsels them to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship. South.

INNO'XIOUS, ĭn-nŏk'shŭs. adj. [innoxius, Latin.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.

Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of men's heads, and horses' manes. Digby.

We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innoxious qualities. Brown.

Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane
The meteor sits. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Pure from crimes.

Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age. Pope.

INNO'XIOUSLY, ĭn-nŏk'shŭs-lē. adv. [from innoxious.]

1. Harmlessly; without harm done.

2. Without harm suffered.

Animals, that can innoxiously digest these poisons, become antidotal to the poison digested. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INNO'XIOUSNESS, ĭn-nŏk'shŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from innoxious.] Harmlessness.

INNUE'NDO, ĭn-nū-ĕn'dō. n. s. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned. L'Estrange.

Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo. Dryd.

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your innuendoes, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows. Swift.

INNU'MERABLE, ĭn-nū'mŭr-ă-bl. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumerabilis, Latin.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities. Shakspeare.

Cover me ye pines,
Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
Hide me where I may never see them more. Milton.

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts. Locke.

INNU'MERABLY, ĭn-nū'mŭr-ă-blē. adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNU'MEROUS, ĭn-nū'mŭr-ŭs.[557] adj. [innumerus, Latin.] Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little chearing,
In this close dungeon of innumerous boughs. Milton.

I take the wood,
And in thick shelter of innum'rous boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows. Pope.

To INO'CULATE, ĭn-ŏk'kū-lāte. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraff, how to inoculate. May's Virgil.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

To INO'CULATE, ĭn-ŏk'kū-lāte. v. a. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants t' inoculate. Cleaveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,
Inoculate carnation. Cleaveland.

INOCULA'TION, ĭn-ŏk-kū-lā'shŭn. n. s. [inoculatio, Latin; from inoculate.]

1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.

Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jasmines. Chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. Miller.

In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Howel.

2. The practice of transplanting the smallpox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease. Arbuthnot.

INOCULA'TOR, ĭn-ŏk'kū-lā-tŭr.[521] n. s. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the smallpox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators. Friend's History of Physick.

INO'DORATE, ĭn-ō'dō-rāte. adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured. Bacon's Natural History.

INO'DOROUS, ĭn-ō'dŭr-ŭs.[314] adj. [inodorus, Latin.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscous, unactive, insipid, inodorous liquor. Arbuthnot.

INOFFE'NSIVE, ĭn-ŏf-fĕn'sĭv.[158] adj. [in and offensive.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking. Fleetwood.

What's good doth open to th' inquirers stand,
And itself offers to th' accepting hand. Denham.

Superficial inquirers may satisfy themselves that the parts of matter are united by ligaments. Glanv.

This is a question only of inquiries, not disputers, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine. Locke.

Late inquirers by their glasses find,
That ev'ry insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, chear'd by the solar rays,
Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackm.

2. One who interrogates; one who questions.

INQUI'RY, în-kwi'rė. n. s. [from inquire.]

1. Interrogation; search by question.

The men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate. Acts.

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controversies about truth. Locke.

1. Not secure; not confident of safety.

He is liable to a great many inconveniencies every moment of his life, and is continually insecure not only of the good things of this life, but even of life itself. Tillotson.

2. Not safe.

INSECU'RITY, ĭn-sē-kū'rē-tē. n. s. [in and security.]

1. Uncertainty; want of confidence.

It may be easily perceived with what insecurity of truth we ascribe effects, depending upon the natural period of time, unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleasure. Brown.

2. Want of safety; danger; hazard.

The unreasonableness and presumption, the danger and desperate insecurity of those that have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition and contrition, sorrow, and resolution of amendment. Hammond.

INSEMINA'TION, în-sêm-mê-nâ'shŭn. n. s. [insemination, French; insemino, Latin.] The act of scattering seed on ground.

INSECU'TION, în-sê-kû'shŭn. n. s. [insecution, French; insecutio, Latin.] Pursuit. Not in use.

Not the king's own horse got more before the wheel
Of his rich chariot, that might still the insecution feel,
With the extreme hairs of his tail. Chapman.

INSE'NSATE, în-sên'sâte.[91] adj. [insensé, French; insensato, Italian.] Stupid; wanting thought; wanting sensibility.

Ye be reprobates; obdurate insensate creatures. Hammond.

So fond are mortal men,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite,
Insensate left, or to sense reprobate,
And with blindness internal struck. Milton.

INSENSIBI'LITY, în-sên-sê-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [insensibilité, French; from insensible.]

1. Inability to perceive.

Insensibility of slow motions may be thus accounted for: motion cannot be perceived without perception of the parts of space which is left, and those which it next acquires. Glanville.

2. Stupidity; dulness of mental perception.

3. Torpor; dulness of corporal sense.

INSE'NSIBLE, în-sên'sê-bl.[405] adj. [insensible, French.]

1. Imperceptible; not discoverable by the senses.

What is that word honour? air; a trim reckoning. Who hath it? he that died a Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible then? yea, to the dead: but will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it. Shaksp.

Two small and almost insensible pricks were found upon Cleopatra's arm. Brown.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton.

3. Without mental or corporal sense.

INSEPARABI'LITY, în-sêp-pâr-â-bîl'ê-tê. }
INSE'PARABLENESS, în-sêp'pâr-â-bl-nês. } n. s. [from inseparable.] The quality of being such as cannot be severed or divided.

The parts of pure space are immoveable, which follows from their inseparability, motion being nothing but change of distance between any two things; but this cannot be between parts that are inseparable. Locke.

INSE'PARABLE, în-sêp'pâr-â-bl. adj. [inseparable, Fr. inseparabilis, Lat.] Not to be disjoined; united so as not to be parted.

Ancient times figure both the incorporation, and inseparable conjunction of counsel with kings, and the wise and politick use of counsel by kings. Bacon.

Thou, my shade
Inseparable, must with me along;
For death from sin no pow'r can separate. Milton.

Care and toil came into the world with sin, and remain ever since inseparable from it. South.

No body feels pain, that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

The parts of pure space are inseparable one from the other, so that the continuity cannot be separated, neither really nor mentally. Locke.

Together out they fly,
Inseparable now the truth and lie;
And this or that unmixt no mortal e'er shall find. Pope.

INSE'PARABLY, în-sêp'pâr-â-blê. adv. [from inseparable.] With indissoluble union.

Drowning of metals is, when the baser metal is so incorporate with the more rich as it cannot be separated; as if silver should be inseparably incorporated with gold. Bacon.

Him thou shalt enjoy,
Inseparably thine. Milton.

Restlessness of mind seems inseparably annexed to human nature. Temple.

Atheists must confess, that before that assigned period matter had existed eternally, inseparably endued with this principle of attraction; and yet had never attracted nor convened before, during that infinite duration. Bentley.

To INSE'RT, în-sêrt'. v. a. [inserer, Fr. insero, insertum, Lat.] To place in or among other things.

Those words were very weakly inserted, where they are so liable to misconstruction. Stillingfleet.

Straightway sent with careful diligence
To fetch a leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of grieved conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser.

Now will be the right season of forming them to be able writers, when they shall be thus fraught with an universal insight into things. Milton.

The use of a little insight in those parts of knowledge, which are not a man's proper business, is to accustom our minds to all sorts of ideas. Locke.

A garden gives us a great insight into the contrivance and wisdom of providence, and suggests innumerable subjects of meditation. Spectator.

Due consideration, and a deeper insight into things, would soon have made them sensible of their error. Woodward.

INSIGNI'FICANCE, în-sîg-nîf'fê-kânse. } INSIGNI'FICANCY, în-sîg-nîf'fê-kân-sê. } n. s. [insignificance, French; from insignificant.]

1. Want of meaning; unmeaning terms.

To give an account of all the insignificancies and verbal nothings of this philosophy, would be to transcribe it. Glanville.

2. Unimportance.

As I was ruminating on that I had seen, I could not forbear reflecting on the insignificancy of human art, when set in comparison with the designs of providence. Addison.

My annals are in mouldy mildews wrought,
With easy insignificance of thought. Garth.

INSIGNI'FICANT, în-sîg-nîf'fê-kânt. adj. [in and significant.]

1. Wanting meaning; void of signification.

'Till you can weight and gravity explain,
Those words are insignificant and vain. Blackmore.

2. Unimportant; wanting weight; ineffectual. This sense, though supported by authority, is not very proper.

That I might not be vapoured down by insignificant testimonies, I presumed to use the great name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glanville.

Calumny robs the public of all that benefit that it may justly claim from the worth and virtue of particular persons, by rendering their virtue utterly insignificant. South.

All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon cheap terms. Tillotson.

Nothing can be more contemptible and insignificant than the scum of a people, instigated against a king. Addison.

In a hemorrhage from the lungs, no remedy so proper as bleeding, often repeated: stypticks are often insignificant. Arbuthnot.

INSIGNI'FICANTLY, în-sîg-nîf'fê-kânt-le. adv. [from insignificant.]

1. Without meaning.

Birds are taught to use articulate words, yet they understand not their import, but use them insignificantly, as the organ or pipe renders the tune, which it understands not. Hale.

2. Without importance or effect.

INSINCE'RE, în-sîn-sêre'. adj. [insincerus, Lat. in and sincere.]

1. Not what he appears; not hearty; dissembling; unfaithful: of persons.

INSI'PID, în-sîp'pîd. adj. [insipide, Fr. insipidus, Latin.]

1. Wanting taste; wanting power of affecting the organs of gust.

Some earths yield, by distillation, a liquor very far from being inodorous or insipid. Boyle.

Our fathers much admir'd their sauces sweet,
And often call'd for sugar with their meat:
Insipid taste, old friend, to them that Paris knew,
Where rocambole, shallot, and the rank garlick grew. King.

This chyle is the natural and alimentary pituita, which the ancients described as insipid. Floyer.

She lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyle's insipid tide. Prior.

2. Wanting spirit; wanting pathos; flat; dull; heavy.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy;
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'erlays your fire. Dryden.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

INSIPI'DITY, în-sê-pîd'ê-tê. } INSI'PIDNESS, în-sîp'pîd-nês. } n. s. [insipidité, Fr. from insipid.]

2. Not to recede from terms or assertions; to persist in.

Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
As our conditions shall insist upon,
Our peace shall stand firm as rocky mountains. Shakspeare.

3. To dwell upon in discourse.

Were there no other act of hostility but that which we have hitherto insisted on, the intercepting of her supplies were irreparably injurious to her. Decay of Piety.

INSI'STENT, în-sîs'tênt. adj. [insistens, Latin.] Resting upon any thing.

The breadth of the substruction must be at least double to the insistent wall. Wotton.

INSI'STURE, în-sîs'tshûre.[461] n. s. [from insist.] This word seems in Shakspeare to signify constancy or regularity, but is now not used.

The heav'ns themselves, the planets, and the center,
Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order. Shaksp.

INSI'TIENCY, în-sîsh'ên-sê. n. s. [in and sitio, Latin.] Exemption from thirst.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for the use we make of him? The docility of an elephant, and the insitiency of a camel for travelling in desarts. Grew.

INSI'TION, în-sîsh'ûn. n. s. [insitio, Lat.] The insertion or ingraffment of one branch into another.

Without the use of these we could have nothing of culture or civility: no tillage, grafting, or insition. Ray.

To INSNA'RE, în-snâre'. v. a. [in and snare.]

1. To intrap; to catch in a trap, gin, or snare; to inveigle.

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider,
Whose deadly web insnareth thee about? Shaksp.

She insnar'd
Mankind with her fair looks. Milton.

By long experience Durfey may no doubt
Insnare a gudgeon, or perhaps a trout;
Though Dryden once exclaim'd in partial spite;
He fish!—because the man attempts to write.
Fenton.

2. To entangle in difficulties or perplexities.

That which is a great part, in the weightiest causes belonging to this present controversy, hath insnared the judgments both of sundry good and of some well learned men, is the manifest truth of certain general principles, whereupon the ordinances that serve for usual practice in the church of God are grounded. Hooker.

That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be insnared. Job.

3. Ensnare is more frequent.

INSNA'RER, în-snâ'rûr.[98] n. s. [from insnare.] He that insnares.

INSO'CIABLE, în-sô'shê-â-bl.[405] adj. [insociable, French; insociabilis, Latin.]

1. Averse from conversation.

If this austere insociable life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood.
Shakspeare.

2. Incapable of connexion or union.

The lowest ledge or row must be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar, which is a general caution for all parts in building that are contiguous to board or timber, because lime and wood are insociable. Wotton.

INSOBRI'ETY, în-sô-brî'ê-tê. n. s. [in and sobriety.] Drunkenness; want of sobriety.

He whose conscience upbraids him with profaneness towards God, and insobriety towards himself, if he is just to his neighbour, he thinks he has quit scores. Decay of Piety.

To I'NSOLATE, în'sô-lâte.[91] v. a. [insolo, Latin.] To dry in the sun; to expose to the action of the sun.

INSOLA'TION, în-sô-lâ'shûn. n. s. [insolation, French; from insolate.] Exposition to the sun.

We use these towers for insolation, refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors. Bacon.

If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale, and attains not its laudable colour, if it be sunned too long, it suffereth a torrefaction. Brown.

I'NSOLENCE, în'sô-lênse. } n. s. [insolence, French; insolentia, Latin.] Pride exerted in contemptuous and overbearing treatment of others; petulant contempt.

I'NSOLENCY, în'sô-lên-sê. }

They could not restrain the insolency of O'Neal, who, finding none now to withstand him, made himself lord of those people that remained. Spenser.

Such a nature
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon; but I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded
Under Cominius. Shaksp.

Blown with insolence and wine. Milton.

Publick judgments are the banks and shores upon which God breaks the insolency of sinners, and stays their proud waves. Tillotson

The steady tyrant man
Who with the thoughtless insolence of power,
For sport alone, pursues the cruel chace. Thomson.

The fear of any violence, either against her own person or against her son, might deter Penelope from using any endeavours to remove men of such insolence and power. Broome.

To I'NSOLENCE, în'sô-lênse. v. a. [from the noun.] To insult; to treat with contempt. A very bad word.

The bishops, who were first faulty, insolenced and assaulted. King Charles.

I'NSOLENT, în'sô-lênt. adj. [insolent, Fr. insolens, Lat.] Contemptuous of others; haughty; overbearing.

We have not pillaged those rich provinces which we rescued: victory itself hath not made us insolent masters. Atterbury.

I'NSOLENTLY, în'sô-lênt-lê. adv. [insolenter, Latin.] With contempt of others; haughtily; rudely.

What I must disprove,
He insolently talk'd to me of love. Dryden.

Not faction, when it shook thy regal seat,
Not senates, insolently loud,
Those echoes of a thoughtless crowd,
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryd.

Briant, naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, more like a criminal than a prisoner of war. Addison.

INSO'LVABLE, în-sôl'vâ-bl. adj. [insolvable, French; in and solve.]

1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.

Spend a few thoughts on the puzzling enquiries concerning vacuums, the doctrine of infinities, indivisibles, and incommensurables, wherein there appear some insolvable difficulties. Watts.

2. That cannot be paid.

INSO'LUBLE, în-sôl'lû-bl.[405] adj. [insoluble, French; insolubilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be cleared; not to be resolved.

Admit this, and what shall the scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts insoluble, and extreme despair. Hooker.

2. Not to be dissolved or separated.

Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it. Arbuthnot.

INSO'LVENT, în-sôl'vênt. adj. [in and solvo, Latin.] Unable to pay.

By public declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit. Howel.

A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life. Addison.

An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts. Watts.

Insolvent tenant of incumber'd space. Smart.

INSO'LVENCY, în-sôl'vên-sê. n. s. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts. An act of insolvency is a law by which imprisoned debtors are released without payment.

INSOMU'CH, în-sô-mûtsh'.[352] conj. [in so much.] So that; to such a degree that. This word is growing obsolete.

It hath ever been the use of the conqueror to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language. Spenser.

To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insomuch as the countries about Ætna have amends made them, for the mischiefs the eruptions do. Bacon.

Simonides was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it. L'Estrange

They made the ground uneven about their nest, insomuch that the slate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison.

To INSPE'CT, în-spêkt'. v. a. [inspicio, inspectum, Latin.] To look into by way of examination.

INSPE'CTION, în-spêk'shûn. n. s. [inspection, French; inspectio, Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
Consider every creature. Milton.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South.

2. Superintendence; presiding care. In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

INSPE'CTOR, în-spêk'tûr.[166] n. s. [Latin.]

1. A prying examiner.

With their new light our bold inspectors press,
Like Cham, to shew their father's nakedness.
Denham.

2. A superintendent.

Young men may travel under a wise inspector or tutor to different parts, that they may bring home useful knowledge. Watts.

INSPE'RSION, în-spêr'shûn. n. s. [inspersio, Latin.] A sprinkling upon. Ains.

To INSPHE'RE, în-sfêre'. v. a. [in and sphere.] To place in an orb or sphere.

Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd,
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.

INSPI'RABLE, în-spî'râ-bl. adj. [from inspire.] Which may be drawn in with the breath; which may be infused.

To these inspirable hurts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of fulginous steams. Harvey.

INSPIRA'TION, în-spê-râ'shûn. n. s. [from inspire.]

1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

2. The act of breathing into any thing.

3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a superiour power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.
—How can she then call us by our names,
Unless it be by inspiration? Shaksp.

Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations. Shaksp.

We to his high inspiration owe,
That what was done before the flood we know.
Denham.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success
Declares was inspiration, and not guess. Denham.

Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it: so were the prophets and the apostles inspired. Watts.

To INSPI'RE, în-spire'. v. n. [inspiro,

Latin; inspirer, Fr.] To draw in the breath: opposed to expire.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly yields to nature and dies. Walton.

To INSPI'RE, în-spire'. v. a.

1. To breathe into.

Ye nine, descend and sing,
The breathing instruments inspire. Pope.

2. To infuse by breathing.

He knew not his Maker, and he that inspired into him an active soul, and breathed in a living spirit. Wisdom.

3. To infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakspeare.

Then to the heart inspir'd
Vernal delight. Milton.

4. To animate by supernatural infusion.

Nor th' inspir'd
Castalian spring. Milton.

Erato, thy poet's mind inspire,
And fill his soul with thy celestial fire. Dryden.

The letters are often read to the young religious, to inspire them with sentiments of virtue. Addison.

5. To draw in with the breath.

By means of sulphurous coal smokes the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country. Harvey.

His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;
Now like a chain around her neck he rides. Dryd.

INSPI'RER, în-spi'rûr.[98] n. s. [from inspire.] He that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspirer of mankind, be all honour. Derham.

To INSPI'RIT, în-spîr'ît. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.

It has pleased God to inspirit and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Piety.

A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspirits the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Atterbury.

The courage of Agamemnon is inspirited by love of empire and ambition. Pope.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

To INSPI'SSATE, în-spîs'sate. v. a. [in and spissus, Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspissate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour. Bacon.

This oil farther inspissated by evaporation turns into balm. Arbuthnot.

INSPISSA'TION, în-spîs-sâ'shûn. n. s. [from inspissate.] The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspissation of the air. Bacon.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot.

INSTABI'LITY, în-stâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [instabilité, French; instabilitas, from instabilis, Latin.] Inconstancy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison.

INSTA'BLE, în-stâ'bl.[405] adj. [instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing. See UNSTABLE.

To INSTA'LL, în-stâll'.[84 406] v. a. [installer, French; in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.

She reigns a goddess now among the saints,
That whilom was the saint of shepherds light,
And is installed now in heaven's hight. Spenser.

Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Install'd archbishop of Canterbury. Shakspeare.

The king chose him master of the horse, after this he was installed of the most noble order. Wotton.

I'NSULT, ĭn'sŭlt.[492] n. s. [insultus, Latin; insulte, French.]

1. The act of leaping upon any thing. In this sense it has the accent on the last syllable: the sense is rare.

The bull's insult at four she may sustain,
But after ten from nuptial rites refrain. Dryden.

2. Act or speech of insolence or contempt.

The ruthless sneer that insult adds to grief.
Savage.

Take the sentence seriously, because railleries are an insult on the unfortunate. Broome.

To INSU'LT, ĭn-sŭlt'. v. a. [insulter, French; insulto, Latin.]

1. To treat with insolence or contempt. It is used sometimes with over, sometimes without a preposition.

The poet makes his hero, after he was glutted by the death of Hector, and the honour he did his friend by insulting over his murderer, to be moved by the tears of king Priam. Pope.

2. To trample upon; to triumph over.

It pleas'd the king his master very lately
To strike at me upon his misconstruction;
When he conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure,
Tript me behind, being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him. Shakspeare.

So 'scapes the insulting fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air. Dryden.

Ev'n when they sing at ease in full content,
Insulting o'er the toil they underwent,
Yet still they find a future task remain,
To turn the soil. Dryden.

INSU'LTER, ĭn-sŭlt'ŭr.[98] n. s. [from insult.] One who treats another with insolent triumph.

Ev'n man, the merciless insulter man,

This appears to be an insuperable objection, because of the evidence that sense seems to give it. Digby.

Much might be done, would we but endeavour; nothing is insuperable to pains and patience. Ray.

And middle natures how they long to join,
Yet never pass the insuperable line. Pope.

INSU'PERABLENESS, ĭn-sū'pĕr-ă-bl-nĕs. n. s. [from insuperable.] Invincibleness, impossibility to be surmounted.

INSU'PERABLY, ĭn-sū'pĕr-ă-blē. adv. [from insuperable.] Invincibly; insurmountably.

Between the grain and the vein of a diamond there is this difference, that the former furthers, the latter, being so insuperably hard, hinders the splitting of it. Grew.

INSUPPO'RTABLE, ĭn-sŭp-pōr'tă-bl. adj. [insupportable, French; in and supportable.] Intolerable; insufferable; not to be endured.

A disgrace put upon a man in company is insupportable; it is heightened according to the greatness, and multiplied according to the number, of the persons that hear. South.

The baser the enemies are, the more insupportable is the insolence. L'Estrange.

The thought of being nothing after death is a burden insupportable to a virtuous man; we naturally aim at happiness, and cannot bear to have it confined to our present being. Dryden.

To those that dwell under or near the equator, this spring would be a most pestilent and insupportable summer; and as for those countries that are nearer the poles, a perpetual spring will not do their business. Bentley.

INSUPPO'RTABLENESS, ĭn-sŭp-pōr'tă-bl-nĕs. n. s. [from insupportable.] Insufferableness; the state of being beyond endurance.

Then fell she to so pitiful a declaration of the insupportableness of her desires, that Dorus's ears procured his eyes with tears to give testimony how much they suffered for her suffering. Sidney.

INSUPPO'RTABLY, ĭn-sŭp-pōr'tă-blē. adv. [from insupportable.] Beyond endurance.

But safest he who stood aloof,
When insupportably his foot advanc'd,
In scorn of their proud arms, and warlike tools,
Spurn'd them to death by troops. Milton.

The first day's audience sufficiently convinc'd me, that the poem was insupportably too long. Dryden.

INSURMO'UNTABLE, ĭn-sŭr-mōŭn'tă-bl.[495] adj. [insurmontable, French; in and surmountable.] Insuperable; unconquerable.

This difficulty is insurmountable, till I can make simplicity and variety the same. Locke.

INSURMO'UNTABLY, ĭn-sŭr-mōŭn'tă-blē

adv. [from insurmountable.] Invincibly; unconquerably.

INSURRE'CTION, în-sûr-rêk'shûn. n. s. [insurgo, Latin.] A seditious rising; a rebellious commotion.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing,
And the first motion, all the interim is
Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
The genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection. Shakspeare.

This city of old time hath made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein. Ezra.

There shall be a great insurrection upon those that fear the Lord. 2 Esdras.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon.

The trade of Rome had like to have suffered another great stroke by an insurrection in Egypt. Arbuthnot.

Of that integrity which should become it. Shaksp.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shaksp.

Whoever has examined both parties cannot go far towards the extremes of either, without violence to his integrity or understanding. Swift.

The libertine, instead of attempting to corrupt our integrity, will conceal and disguise his own vices. Rogers.

2. Purity; genuine unadulterated state.

3. Intireness; unbroken whole.

Take away this transformation, and there is no chasm, nor can it affect the integrity of the action. Broome.

INTE'GUMENT, în-têg'gû-mênt. n. s. [integumentum, intego, Latin.] Any thing that covers or invelops another.

He could no more live without his frize coat than without his skin: it is not indeed so properly his coat, as what the anatomists call one of the integuments of the body. Addison.

I'NTELLECT, în'têl-lêkt. n. s. [intellect, French; intellectus, Latin.] The intelligent mind; the power of understanding.

All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
All intellect, all sense. Milton.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, which vulgar minds gaze at, and the ingenious pursue, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin and time. South.

INTELLE'CTION, în-têl-lêk'shûn. n. s. [intellection, French; intellectio, Latin.] The act of understanding.

Simple apprehension denotes the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glanville's Scepsis.

They will say 'tis not the bulk or substance of the animal spirit, but its motion and agility, that produces intellection and sense. Bentley.

INTELLE'CTIVE, în-têl-lêk'tîv. adj. [intellectif, French; from intellect.] Having power to understand.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective. Glanville.

INTELLE'CTUAL, în-têl-lêk'tshû-âl.[481] adj. [intellectuel, French; intellectualis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; transacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be eased in the only offices of religion. Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logick is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers. Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,
Beneath a bow'r for sorrow made,
The melancholy Cowley lay. Cowley.

A train of phantoms in wild order rose,
And join'd, this intellectual scene compose. Pope.

4. Having the power of understanding.

Anaxagoras and Plato term the Maker of the world an intellectual worker. Hooker.

Who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost,
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion? Milton.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Cudworth names his book the intellectual system of the universe.

INTELLE'CTUAL, în-têl-lêk'tshû-âl. n. s. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. Little in use.

Her husband not nigh,
Whose higher intellectual more I shun. Milton.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellectual, is dangerously influential. Glanville.

I have not consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their weaknesses into such discerning presences. Glanville.

INTE'LLIGENCE, în-têl'lê-jênse. } n. s. [in-

So swells each wind-pipe; ass intones to ass
Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad.

To INTO'RT, în-tôrt'. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits: and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Arbuthnot.

With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold,
Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd.
Pope.

To INTO'XICATE, în-tôks'ê-kâte. v. a. [in and toxicum, Lat.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it t*intoxicateth;* and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth.
Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equall'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots. Decay of Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having different qualities from the plant; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuthnot.

INTOXICA'TION, în-tôks-ê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [from intoxicate.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besotting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. South.

INTRA'CTABLE, în-trâk'tâ-bl. adj. [intractabilis, Latin; intraitable, French.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who love us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward.

INTRA'CTABLENESS, în-trâk'tâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from intractable.] Obstinacy; perverseness.

INTRA'CTABLY, în-trâk'tâ-blê. adv. [from intractable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUI'LLITY, în-trân-kwîl-ê-tê. n. s. [in and tranquillity.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquillity which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRA'NSITIVE, în-trâns'ê-tîv. adj. [intransitivus, Lat.] [In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object: as, curro, I run. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INTRANSMU'TABLE, în-trâns-mû'tâ-bl.[405] adj. [in and transmutable.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray on the Creation.

To INTRE'ASURE, în-trêzh'ûre. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he intreasur'd. Shakspeare.

To INTRE'NCH, în-trênsh'. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.] To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another: with on.

Little I desire my sceptre should intrench on God's sovereiguty, which is the only king of men's consciences. King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

To INTRE'NCH, în-trênsh'. v. a.

1. To break with hollows.

His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRE'NCHANT, în-trênsh'ânt. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakspeare, is thus explained: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hanmer. I believe Shakspeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakspeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed.
Shakspeare.

INTRE'NCHMENT, în-trênsh'mênt. n. s. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTRE'PID, în-trêp'îd. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field.
Thomson.

INTREPI'DITY, în-trê-pîd'ê-tê. n. s. [intrepidité, French.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver.

INTRE'PIDLY, în-trêp'îd-lê. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

I'NTRICACY, în'trê-kâ-sê. n. s. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

I'NTRICATE, în'trê-kâte[91] adj. [intricatus, Latin.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To I'NTRICATE, în'trê-kâte.[91] [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

I'NTRICATELY, în'trê-kâte-lê. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

I'NTRICATENESS, în'trê-kâte-nês. n. s. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRI'GUE, în-trêêg'.[112 337] n. s. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires.
Flatman.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRI'GUE, în-trêêg'. v. n. [intriguer, French, from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

INTRI'GUER, în-trêêg'ûr.[98] n. s. [intrigueur, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.

INTRI'GUINGLY, în-trêêg'îng-lê. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRI'NSECAL, în-trîn'sê-kâl. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin; intrinseque, French. This word is now generally written intrinsical, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

INTRI'NSECALLY, în-trîn'sê-kâl-ê. adv. [from intrinsecal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsecally evil. South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsecally and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again: nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley.

INTRI'NSECATE, în-trîn'sê-kâte. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intrinsecate t' unloose. Shaksp. King Lear.

Come, mortal wretch,
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once untye. Shakspeare.

INTRI'NSICK, în-trîn'sîk. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsick goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken: that is, a man's intrinsick, this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd
The more shall its intrinsick worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsick value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers.

To INTRODU'CE, în-trô-dûse'.[376] v. a. [introduco, Latin, introduire, French.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown.

An author who should introduce a sport of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Broome.

3. To produce; to give occasion to.

Whatsoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke on Education.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

If he will introduce himself by prefaces, we cannot help it. Layer's Trial.

INTRODU'CER, în-trô-dû'sûr. n. s. [introducteur, French, from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODU'CTION, în-trô-dûk'shûn. n. s. [introduction, French, introductio, Latin.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODU'CTIVE, în-trô-dûk'tîv. adj. [introductif, Fr. from introduce.] Serving as the means to something else.

The truths of Christ crucified, is the christian's philosophy, and a good life is the christian's logick; that great instrumental introductive art, that must guide the mind into the former. South.

INTRODU'CTORY, în-trô-dûk'tûr-ê.[512] adj. [from introductus, Latin.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introductory discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book. Boyle.

INTROGRE'SSION, în-trô-grêsh'ûn. n. s. [introgressio, Lat.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTRO'IT, în-trôît'. n. s. [introit, French.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of public devotions.

INTROMI'SSION, în-trô-mîsh'ûn. n. s. [intromissio, Lat.]

1. The act of sending in.

If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd. Peacham.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

2. [In the Scotish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects: as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.

To I'NTROMIT, în-trô-mît'. v. a. [intromitto, Latin.]

1. To send in; to let in; to admit.

2. To allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

Glass in the window intromits light without cold to those in the room. Holder.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intromit or transmit other sorts. Newton.

To INTROSPE'CT, în-trô-spêkt'. v. a. [introspectus, Lat.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPE'CTION, în-trô-spêk'shûn. n. s. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man. Hale.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Dryden.

INTROVE'NIENT, în-trô-vê'nê-ênt. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introvenient nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown.

To INTRU'DE, în-trôôd'. v. n. [intrudo, Latin.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd. Shakspeare.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. South.

2. It is followed by on before persons, or personal possessions.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship
Intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late
To greet you with the tidings of success. Rowe.

Some thoughts rise and intrude upon us, while we shun them, others fly from us, when we would hold them. Watts.

3. To encroach, to force in uncalled or unpermitted; sometimes with into.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. Colossians.

To INTRU'DE, în-trôôd',[339] v. a. To force without right or welcome: commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Pope.

INTRU'DER, în-trôô'dûr.[98] n. s. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Shaksp.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates.
Shaksp.

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Davies.

Will you a bold intruder never learn
To know your basket, and your bread discern?
Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces; they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Locke.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. Addison.

INTRU'SION, în-trôô'zhûn. n. s. [intrusion, French; intrusio, Latin.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

Many excellent strains have been jostled off by the intrusions of poetical fictions. Brown.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the intrusion of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shaksp.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill
With loath'd intrusion. Par. Lost.

How 's this, my son? Why this intrusion?
Were not my orders that I should be private?
Addison.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your meditations. Wake's Prep. for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Wotton.

To INTRU'ST, în-trûst'. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value: as, we intrust another with something; or we intrust something to another.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move,
Intrust thy fortune to the powers above. Dryden.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword
In Rome's defence, intrusted to our care? Addison.

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant. Arbuthnot.

INTUI'TION, în-tû-ish'ûn. n. s. [intuitus, intueor, Latin.]

1. Sight of any thing: used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him. Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the casualty itself is insensible. Glanville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTU'ITIVE, în-tû'ê-tîv. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives
Discursive or intuitive. Milton.

INTU'ITIVELY, în-tû'ê-tîv-lê. adv. [intuitivement, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his? Hooker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUME'SCENCE, în-tû-mês'sênse.
INTUME'SCENCY, în-tû-mês'sên-sê.[510] n. s. [intumescence, French; intumesco, Latin.] Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terreous parts at the bottom, as they are more hardly or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescencies. Brown.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and occasions an earthquake. Woodward.

INTURGE'SCENCE, jîn-tûr-ês'sênse.[510] n. s. [in and turgesco, Lat.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. Brown.

INTU'SE, în-tûse'. n. s. [intusus, Latin.] Bruise.

She did search the swelling bruze,
And having search'd the intuse deep,
She bound it with her scarf. Spenser.

To INTWI'NE, în-twine'. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twist or wreath together.

This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them. Hooker.

2. To be inserted by being wreathed or twisted.

The vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs intwine.
Dryden.

To INVA'DE, în-vâde'. v. a. [invado, Latin.]

1. To attack a country; to make a hostile entrance.

He will invade them with troops. Habb.

Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms. Knolles.

With dang'rous expedition they invade
Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton.

Thy race in times to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esdras.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm
Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee:
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Shaksp.

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;
And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

INVA'DER, în-vâ'dûr.[98] n. s. [from invado, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid
Against invaders. Milton.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.

Where he lost, the naked empire
Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Denham.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand,
Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join,
To call the fair invader in;
My darling favourite inclination, too,
All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance was formerly comprised in that uncompounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

INVALE'SCENCE, în-vâ-lês'sênse. n. s. [invalesco, Lat.] Strength; health; force. Dict.

INVA'LID, în-vâl'îd. adj. [invalide, Fr. invalidus, Lat.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge,
Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew
Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton

To INVA'LIDATE, în-vâl'ê-dâte. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alledged. Boyle.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

INVALI'DE, în-vâ-lêêd'.[112] n. s. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts.

What beggar in the invalides,
With lameness broke, with blindness smitten,
Wish'd ever decently to die? Prior.

INVALI'DITY, în-vâ-lîd'ê-tê. n. s. [in and validity; invalidité, French.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency.
2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want. Temple.

INVA'LUABLE, în-vâl'ù-â-bl. adj. [in and valuable.] Precious above estimation; inestimable.

The faith produced by terrour would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing. Atterbury.

INVA'RIABLE, în-vâ'rê-â-bl. adj. [in and varius, Lat. invariable, Fr.] Unchangeable; constant.

Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars. Brown.

The rule of good and evil would not appear uniform and invariable, but different, according to men's different complexions and inclinations. Atterbury.

INVA'RIABLENESS, în-vâ'rê-â-bl-nês. n. s. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy.

INVA'RIABLY, în-vâ'rê-â-blê. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly.

INVA'SION, în-vâ'zhûn. n. s. [invasion, Fr. invasio, Latin.]

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Sam.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South.

The nations of th' Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryden.

William the conqueror invaded England about the year 1060, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time 'till now, for one entire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of a disease.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbuthnot.

INVA'SIVE, în-vâ'sîv.[158 428] adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other men's possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryd.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gasping nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the desarts that their swords had made. Arbuthnot.

INVE'CTIVE, în-vêk'tîv.[140] n. s. [invective, French; invectiva, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glossing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of christian duty. Hooker.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the word, for an invective, 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryden.

2. It is used with against.

So desp'rate thieves all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers. Shaksp.

Casting off respect, he fell to bitter invectives against the French king. Bacon.

3. Less properly with at.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invectives we make at their supposed errours fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

INVE'CTIVE, în-vêk'tîv. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invective muse
Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVE'CTIVELY, în-vêk'tîv-lê. adv. Satirically; abusively.

Thus most invectively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yea, and of this our life; swearing that we
Are mere usurpers, tyrants. Shaksp.

To INVE'IGH, în-vâ'.[349 390] v. a. [inveho, Latin.] To utter censure or reproach: with against.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retail their lies. Arbuth.

INVE'IGHER, în-vâ'ûr. n. s. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.

One of these inveighers against mercury, in seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face. Wiseman.

To INVE'IGLE, în-vê'gl.[350] v. a. [invogliare, Italian; Minshew; aveugler, or enaveugler, Fr. Skinner and Junius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.

Most false Duessa, royal richly dight,
That easy was to inveigle weaker sight,
Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might. Fairy Queen.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him. Shak.

Yet have they many baits and guileful spells,
To inveigle and invite the unwary sences
Of them that pass unweeting by the way. Milton.

Both right able
T' inveigle and draw in the rabble. Hudibras.

Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking. Temple.

The inveigling a woman before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old. Spectator.

INVE'IGLER, în-vê'gl-ûr.[98] n. s. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Being presented to the emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler. Sandys.

To INVE'NT, în-vênt'. v. a. [inventer, French; invenio, Latin.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

By their count, which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains. Spenser.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none
She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment. Fairy Queen.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos.

We may invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies. Milton.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Ray.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace,
By manag'd fire and late invented eyes. Blackmore.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech.

The ship, by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Arbuthnot.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me. Susannah.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain sense of the words. Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave. Shaksp.

Hercules's meeting with Pleasure and Virtue was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawnings of philosophy. Addison.

4. To light on; to meet with. Not used.

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Spenser.

INVE'NTER, în-vênt'ûr. n. s. [from inventeur, Fr.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator he was just; as an inventer, he was rich. Garth.

2. A forger.

INVE'NTION, în-vên'shûn. n. s. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Excogitation; the act or power of producing something new.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shaksp.
By improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgment more.
Roscommon.
Invention is a kind of muse, which being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest. Dryden.
Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre:
Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire. Dryd.
The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer is invention. Pope.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate spittle from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivales. Ray.

3. Forgery; fiction.

We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention. Shaksp.
If thou can'st accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shaksp.

4. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Sidney.
Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton.

INVE'NTIVE, în-vên'tîv. adj. [inventif, Fr. from invent.]

1. Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients.

Those have the inventivest heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Ascham.
That inventive head
Her fatal image from the temple drew,
The sleeping guardians of the castle slew. Dryden.
The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart.
Dryden.

2. Having the power of excogitation or fiction.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Raleigh.
Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart. Denham.

INVE'NTOR, în-vênt'ûr.[166] n. s. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new. It is written likewise inventer.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships; your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.
Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare,
Unmindful of their maker. Milton.
Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upshot, purposes mistook,
Fall'n on th' inventors' heads. Shaksp.

INVENTO'RIALLY, în-vên-tô'rê-âl-lê. adv. [from inventory, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventory.

To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shaksp.

INVE'NTORY, în'vên-tûr-ê.[512] n. s. [inventoire, French; inventarium, Latin.] An account or catalogue of moveables.

I found,
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate. Shaksp.
The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferings is a gain to them. Shak.
Whoe'er looks,
For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books,
Shall find their wardrobe's inventory. Donne.
It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as, on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other. Grew.
In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattles; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to toss half a dozen women into the bargain. Addison.

To I'NVENTORY, în'vên-tûr-ê. v. a. [inventorier, French.] To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labell'd. Shaksp.
A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods.
Government of the Tongue.

INVE'NTRESS, în-vên'três. n. s. [inventrice, French; from inventor.] A female that invents.

The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Burnet.
Cecilia came;
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVE'RSE, în'vêrse.[431] adj. [inverse, Fr. inversus, Latin.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garth.

INVE'RSION, în-vêr'shûn. n. s. [inversion, French; inversio, Latin.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown.
'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament: your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed among the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so that each takes the room of the other.

To INVE'RT, în-vêrt'.[556] v. a. [inverto, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down, to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?
And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn! Waller.
Ask not the cause why sullen spring
So long delays her flow'rs to bear,
And winter storms invert the year. Dryden.
Poesy and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can show it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule
Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to embezzle. Instead of this convert or intervert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Knolles.

INVE'RTEDLY, în-vêr'têd-lê. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Placing the forepart of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landskip of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Derham.

To INVE'ST, în-vêst'. v. a. [investir, Fr. investio, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. It has in or with before the thing superinduced or conferred.

Their gesture sad,
Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. Shakspeare.
Thou with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters. Milton.
Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks. Denham.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.
After the death of the other archbishop, he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarendon.
The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atterbury.

3. To adorn; to grace: as clothes or ornaments.

Honour must,
Not accompanied, invest him only;
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers. Shaksp.
The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong atchieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shak.
Some great potentate,
Or of the thrones above; such majesty
Invests him coming. Milton.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government. Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVE'STIENT, în-vês'tshênt.[464] adj. [investiens, Latin.] Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plasms or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVE'STIGABLE, în-vês'tê-gâ-bl. adj. [from investigate.] To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Hooker.
In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Hooker.

To INVE'STIGATE, în-vês'tê-gâte.[91] v. a. [investigo, Lat.] To search out; to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Holder.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Cheyne.

INVESTIGA'TION, în-vês-tê-gâ'shŭn. n. s. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought
Investigation calm, whose silent powers
Command the world. Thomson.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope.

INVE'STITURE, în-vês'tê-tûre. n. s. [Fr.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh.

2. The act of giving possession.

INVE'STMENT, în-vêst'mênt. n. s. [in and vestment.] Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments shew.
Shakspeare.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintained,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war?
Shakspeare.

INVE'TERACY, în-vêt'têr-â-sê. n. s. [inveteratio, Latin.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

2. [In physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVE'TERATE, în-vêt'têr-âte.[91] adj. [inveteratus, Latin.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of scripture, to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder, and exulcerate it. Bacon.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit: but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

To INVE'TERATE, în-vêt'têr-âte. v. a. [inveterer, Fr. invetero, Latin.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into men's minds. Bacon.

Let not atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley.

INVE'TERATENESS, în-vêt'têr-âte-nês. n. s. [from inveterate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalency of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVETERA'TION, în-vêt-têr-â'shŭn. n. s. [inveteratio, Latin.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVI'DIOUS, în-vîd'ê-ûs, or în-vîd'jê-ûs.[293 376] adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes. Broome.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVI'DIOUSLY, în-vîd'ê-ûs-lê. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Sprat.

INVI'DIOUSNESS, în-vîd'ê-ûs-nês. n. s. [from invidious.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

To INVI'GORATE, în-vîg'gô-râte. v. a. [in and vigour.] To endue with vigour; to strengthen; to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown.

Gentle warmth
Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb,
Invigorating tender seeds. Philips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lightsome and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spectator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity. Atterbury.

INVIGORA'TION, în-vîg-gô-râ'shŭn. n. s. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invigoration. Norris.

INVI'NCIBLE, în-vîn'sê-bl.[405] adj. [invincible, French; invincibilis, Latin.] Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I would have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shaksp.

Should he invade their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms. Knolles.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible errour, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment. Locke.

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Bentley.

INVI'NCIBLENESS, în-vîn'sê-bl-nês. n. s. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

INVI'NCIBLY, în-vîn'sê-blê. adv. [from invincible.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause;
And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done
Invincibly. Milton.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. Decay of Piety.

INVI'OLABLE, în-vî'ô-lâ-bl.[405] adj. [inviolable, Fr. inviolabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place inviolable, and these from harm. Milton.

In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Ye lamps of heav'n, he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!
Inviolable pow'rs! ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and inviolable. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable. Shaksp.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

Th' inviolable saints
In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd intire. Milton.

INVI'OLABLY, în-vî'ô-lâ-blê. adv. [from inviolable.] Without breach; without failure.

Mere acquaintance you have none: you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

The true profession of christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Sprat.

INVI'OLATE, în-vî'ô-lâte.[91] adj. [inviolate, French; inviolatus, Latin.] Unhurt; uninjured; unprofaned; unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still inviolate. Bacon.

But let inviolate truth be always dear
To thee, even before friendship, truth prefer.
Denham.

If the past
Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I
Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd inviolate:
I beg thy pardon. Denham.

My love your claim inviolate secures;
'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like heav'n's, was kept inviolate. Dryd.

I'NVIOUS, în'vê-ûs. adj. [invius, Latin.] Impassable; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue invious ways can prove,
What may not he confide to do,
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.

To INVI'SCATE, în-vîs'kâte. v. a. [in and viscus, Latin.] To lime; to entangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden emission, it inviscates and intangleth those insects. Brown.

INVISIBI'LITY, în-vîz-ê-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [invisibilité, French; from invisible.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibleness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibility. Ray.

INVI'SIBLE, în-vîz'ê-bl.[405] adj. [invisible, French; invisibilis, Lat.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so;
And none invisible, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

The tareaden sails,
Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,
Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea. Shak.

'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught. Shaksp.

To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowest works. Milton.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Tillotson.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVI'SIBLY, în-vîz'ê-blê. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.

INVITA'TION, în-vê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [invitation, French; invitatio, Latin.] The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility.

That other answer'd with a lowly look,
And soon the gracious invitation took. Dryden.

INVI'TATORY, în-vê-tâ'tûr-ê. adj. [from invito, Latin.] Using invitation; containing invitation.

To INVITE, în-vîte'. v. a. [invito, Lat. inviter, French.]

He comes invited by a younger son. Milton.

When much company is invited, then be as sparing as possible of your coals. Swift.

2. To allure; to persuade; to induce by hope or pleasure.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

Nor art thou such
Created, or such place hast here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though spirits of heav'n,
To visit thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with, served still to invite more labourers into that work. Decay of Piety.

Shady groves, that easy sleep invite,
And after toilsome days a soft repose at night.
Dryden's Virgil.

To INVI'TE, în-vîte'. v. n. [invito, Latin.] To ask or call to any thing pleasing.

All things invite
To peaceful counsels. Milton.

INVI'TER, în-vî'tûr.[98] n. s. [from invite.] He who invites.

They forcibly cut out abortive votes, such as their inviters and encouragers most fancied. King Charles.

Honour was the aim of the guests, and interest was the scope of the inviter. Smalridge.

Wines and cates the tables grace,
But most the kind inviter's cheerful face. Pope.

INVI'TINGLY, în-vî'ting-lê. adv. [from inviting.] In such a manner as invites or allures.

If he can but dress up a temptation to look invitingly, the business is done. Decay of Piety.

INU'NCTION, în-ûngk'shûn. n. s. [inungo, inunctus, Latin.] The act of smearing or anointing.

The wise author of nature hath placed on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INUNDA'TION, în-ûn-dâ'shûn. n. s. [inundation, French; inundatio, Latin.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says Cowley, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,
That she would give her sorrow so much sway;
And in his wisdom hastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakspeare.

The same inundation was not past forty foot in most places; so that some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation rise
Above the highest hills. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is winter unto the Ethiopians. Brown.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods, and inundations near. Dryd.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish, were utterly wasted. Spenser.

To I'NVOCATE, în'vô-kâte.[91] v. a. [invoco, Latin.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be 't lawful, that I invocate thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shaksp.

If Dagon be thy God,
Go to his temple, invocate his aid
With solemnest devotion. Milton's Agonistes.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
'Till vermin or the draff of servile food
Consume me, and oft invocated death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton.

INVOCA'TION, în-vô-kâ'shûn. n. s. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.

Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cause, as I suppose, but to shew that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hooker.

2. The form of calling for the assistance or presence of any being.

My invocation is
Honest and fair, and in his mistress' name. Shaksp.

The proposition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Wase.

I will strain myself to breathe out this one invocation. Howel.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities. Addison on Italy.

I'NVOICE, în'vôise. n. s. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyez, send.] A catalogue of the freight of a ship, or of the articles and price of goods sent by a factor.

To INVO'KE, în-vôke'. v. a. [invoco, Latin; invoquer, French.] To call upon; to implore; to pray to; to invocate.

From all the rest of whom to be invok'd. Milton.

The skilful bard,
Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,
To make his hero and himself immortal. Prior.

To INVO'LVE, în-vôlv'. v. a. [involvo, Lat.]

1. To inwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.

Leave a singed bottom all involv'd
With stench and smoke. Milton.

No man could miss his way to heaven for want of light; and yet so vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkness. Decay of Piety.

In a cloud involv'd, he takes his flight,
Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight.
Dryden.

2. To imply; to comprise.

We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

3. To intwist; to join.

He knows his end with mine involv'd. Milton.

4. To take in; to catch; to conjoin.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng. Pope.

Sin we should hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the person which we should not hate at all. Sprat.

One death involves
Tyrants and slaves. Thomson's Summer.

5. To entangle.

This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from helping at all, that it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men's reason. Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.

Some involv'd their snaky folds. Milton.

Syllogism is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to shew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses. Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.

Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton.

INVO'LUNTARILY, în-vôl'ûn-tâ-rê-lê. adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice; not spontaneously.

INVO'LUNTARY, în-vôl'ûn-tâ-rê. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin; involuntaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confess. Pope.

2. Not chosen; not done willingly.

The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.

But why, ah tell me, ah too dear!
Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear? Pope.

INVOLU'TION, ĭn-vŏ-lū'shŭn. n. s. [involutio, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or inwrapping.

To INU'RE, ĭn-ūre'. v. a. [in and ure.] To habituate; to make ready or willing by practice and custom; to accustom. It had anciently with before the thing practised, now to.

Because they so proudly insult, we must a little inure their ears with hearing how others, whom they more regard, are accustomed to use the selfsame language with us. Hooker.

If there might be added true art and learning, there would be as much difference, in maturity of judgment, between men therewith inured, and that which now men are, as between men that are now and innocents. Hooker.

That it may no painful work endure,
It to strong labour can itself inure. Hub. Tale.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately inured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor. Spenser.

The forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

Then cruel, by their sports to blood inur'd
Of fighting beasts, and men to beasts expos'd. Milton.

To inure
Our prompt obedience. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They, who had been most inured to business, had not in their lives ever undergone so great fatigue for twenty days together. Clarendon.

We may inure ourselves by custom to bear the extremities of weather without injury. Addison.

INU'REMENT, ĭn-ūre'mĕnt. n. s. [from inure.] Practice; habit; use; custom; frequency.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance a secret appetite, and habitual inclination to the site it held, then how much more may education, being nothing else but a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Wotton.

To INU'RN, ĭn-ūrn'. v. a. [in and urn.] To intomb; to bury.

The sepulchre
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,
Hath op'd its ponderous and marble jaws
To cast thee up again. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

And waste his inward gall with deep despight. Fairy Queen.

To each inward part
It shoots invisible. Milton.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure more plainly. Pope.

2. Reflecting; deeply thinking.

With outward smiles their flatt'ry I receiv'd!
But bent and inward to myself again
Perplex'd, these matters I revolv'd, in vain. Prior.

3. Intimate; domestick; familiar.

Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not but great abuses lurk in so inward and absolute a privilege. Spenser.

All my inward friends abhorred me. Job.

4. Seated in the mind.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp.

I'NWARD, ĭn'wârd.[88] n. s.

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels. Seldom has this sense a singular.

Then sacrificing, laid
The inwards, and their fat, with incense strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd. Milton.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards. Mortimer.

2. Intimate; near acquaintance. Little used.

Sir, I was an inward of his; a sly fellow was the duke; and I know the cause of his withdrawing. Shakspeare.

1. To cover by involution; to involve.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtil net,
Inwrapped in foul smoak. Fairy Queen.

This as an amber drop inwraps a bee,
Covering discovers your quick soul; that we
May in your through-shine front our hearts thoughts see. Donne.

2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.

The case is no sooner made than resolved; if it be made not inwrapped, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.

3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be enrap, or inrap, from in and rapi, rapio, Latin, to ravish or transport.

This pearl she gave me I do feel 't and see 't;
And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
Yet 'tis not madness. Shakspeare.

For if such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back and fetch the age of gold. Milton.

INWRO'UGHT, ĭn-râwt'.[319] adj. [in and wrought.] Adorned with work.

Camus, reverend sir, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge

He has no power of himself to leave it; but he is ruined jocundly and pleasantly, and damned according to his heart's desire. South.

To JOG, jŏg. v. a. [schocken, Dutch.] To push; to shake by a sudden impulse; to give notice by a sudden push.

Now leaps he upright, jogs me and cries, Do you see
Yonder well favour'd youth? Donne.

This said, he jogg'd his good steed nigher,
And steer'd him gently toward the squire. Hudib.

I was pretty well pleased while I expected, till fruition jogged me out of my pleasing slumber, and I knew it was but a dream. Norris.

Sudden I jogg'd Ulysses, who was laid
Fast by my side. Pope's Odyssey.

To Jog, jŏg. v. n.

1. To move by succussation; to move with small shocks like those of a low trot.

The door is open, sir, there lies good way,
You may be jogging while your boots are green. Shakspeare.

Here lieth one, who did most truly prove
That he could never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot. Milton.

2. To travel idly and heavily.

Jog on, jog on the foot-path way,
And merrily heat the stile-a,
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a mile-a. Shakspeare.

Away they trotted together: but as they were jogging on, the wolf spy'd a bare place about the dog's neck. L'Estrange.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,
And murd'ring plays, which they miscal reviving. Dryden.

Jog, jŏg. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A push; a slight shake; a sudden interruption by a push or shake; a hint given by a push.

As a leopard was valuing himself upon his party-coloured skin, a fox gave him a jog, and whispered, that the beauty of the mind was above that of a painted outside. L'Estrange.

Nick found the means to slip a note into Lewis's hands, which Lewis as slily put into John's pocket, with a pinch or a jog to warn him what he was about. Arbuthnot.

A letter when I am inditing,
Comes Cupid and gives me a jog,
And I fill all the paper with writing
Of nothing but sweet Molly Mog. Swift.

2. A rub; a small stop; an irregularity of motion.

How that which penetrates all bodies without the least jog or obstruction, should impress a motion on any is inconceivable. Glanville.

Jo'gger, jŏg'gŭr.[98] n. s. [from jog.] One who moves heavily and dully.

They, with their fellow joggers of the plough. Dryden.

To Jo'ggle, jŏg'gl.[405] v. n. To shake.

In the head of man, the base of the brain is parallel to the horizon; by which there is less danger of the two brains joggling, or slipping out of their place. Derham.

Jo'hnapple, jŏn'ăp-pl. n. s.

A johnapple is a good relished sharp apple the spring following, when most other fruit is spent: they are fit for the cyder plantations. Mortimer.

If we no more meet till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriours all, adieu. Shak.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to flie:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryd.

The good christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

Jo'YFULNESS, jôé'fûl-nês. n. s. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut.

Jo'YLESS, jôé'lês. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A litte joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shakspeare.

With downcast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below:
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest;
Forsakes his food, and, pining for the lass,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass.
Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.

A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is a babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shaksp.

Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd,
Casual fruition. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession. Decay of Piety.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him.
Addison.

Jo'YOUS, jôé'ûs.[314] adj. [joyeux, French.]

1. Glad; gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my falser friend did no less joyous deem.
Fairy Queen.

Joyous the birds: fresh gales and gentle airs
Whisper'd it. Milton.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature stung, renew their love.
Dryden.

Fast by her flow'ry bank the sons of Arcas,
Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect
Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave.
Prior.

2. Giving joy.

They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round.
Fairy Queen.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.

Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs.
Dryden.

IPECACUA'NHA, îp-pé-kâk-ù-â'nâ. n. s. An Indian plant.

Ipecacuanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly. Hill's Mat. Med.

IRA'SCIBLE, î-râs'sé-bl.[118] adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascible, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiscible distractions the crasis of the liver. Brown.

I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbuthnot.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE, îre. n. s. [Fr. ira, Lat.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire.
Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease mine heart.
Shakspeare.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long
Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton.

The sentence from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her sire. Dryden.

I'REFUL, îre'fûl. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd. Shaksp.

By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise.
Fairfax.

In midst of all the dome misfortune sat,

And gloomy discontent, and fell debate,
And madness laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.

I'REFULLY, ire'fûl-ê. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

I'RIS, i'ris. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.

Beside the solary iris, which God shewed unto Noah, there is another lunary, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.

When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris, 2gr. 10′; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green, in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opticks.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all hues, roses and jessamine. Milton.

To IRK, êrk.[108] v. a. [yrk, Islandick.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mihi pœne est, it give me pain; or, I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the accidence say tædit, it irketh.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakspeare.
It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shaksp.

I'RKSOME, êrk'sûm.[166] adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.

I know she is an irksome brawling scold. Shaksp.
Since that thou can'st talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shakspeare.
Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours till his great chief return. Milt.
For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton.
There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addison's Spectator.
Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

I'RKSOMELY, êrk'sûm-lê. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.

I'RKSOMENESS, êrk'sûm-nês. n. s. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

I'RON, i'ûrn.[417] n. s. [haiarn, Welsh; ıꝛeꝛn, ıꝛen, Saxon; iorn, Erse.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, it is scarce malleable. Most of the other metals are brittle while they are hot, but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. The specifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.
If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Numbers.
The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.
In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates placed parallel to each other. Woodward.
There are incredible quantities of iron flag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward.
Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward.
I treated of making iron work and steel work. Moxon.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shaksp.
O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shaksp.
Can'st thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fishspears? Job.
For this your locks in paper durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.

The iron entered into his soul. Psalms.
His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Psalms.

I'RON, i'ûrn. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd mę not secure. Shak.
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell. Shaksp.
Some are of an iron red, shining and polite; others not polite, but as if powder'd with iron dust. Woodward.
Poll-cats and weesels do a great deal of injury to warrens; the way of taking them is in hutches and iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward.
Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodward.

3. Harsh; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind
Assist the throne of th' iron scepter'd king. Crashaw.
O sad virgin, that thy pow'r
Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek. Milton.
In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.
Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep;
Imprudent! him death's iron sleep opprest. Philips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes. Shaksp.

To I'RON, i'ûrn. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smooth with an iron.

2. To shackle with irons.

IRO'NICAL, i-rôn'nê-kâl.[88] [115] adj. [ironique, French; from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Brown.
I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRO'NICALLY, i-rôn'nê-kâl-ê. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wise, and knew it; and others were not wise, and knew it not. Bacon.
The dean, ironically grave,
Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.

IRONMO'NGER, i'ûrn-mûng-gûr. n. s. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

I'RONWOOD, i'ûrn-wûd. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America. Robinson Crusoe.

I'RONWORT, i'ûrn-wûrt. n. s. [sideritis, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

I'RONY, i'ûrn-ê. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary; it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond.
Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal; suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposit, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward.

I'RONY, i'ûrn-ê. n. s. [ironie, French; ἰρωνεία.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words, as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRA'DIANCE, ir-râ'dê-ânse. } [505] n. s.
IRRA'DIANCY, ir-râ'dê-ân-sê. }
[irradiance, French; irradio, Latin.]

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its translucency: the irradiancy and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heav'nly spirits? or do they mix
Irradiance virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.

To IRRA'DIATE, ir-râ'dê-âte. v. a. [irradio, Latin.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby.
It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.

Celestial light
Shine inward, and the mind through all her pow'rs
Irradiate; there plant eyes; all mist from thence Purge and disperse. Milton.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.

No weeping orphan saw his father's store
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floor. Pope.

IRRADIA'TION, ir-râ-dê-â'shûn. n. s. [irradiation, French; from irradiate.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.

If light were a body, it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown.

2. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation. Hale.

IRRA'TIONAL, îr-râsh'ô-nâl. adj. [irrationalis, Latin.]

1. Void of reason; void of understanding; wanting the discoursive faculty.

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things; but discord first,
Daughter of sin, among th' irrational
Death introduc'd. Milton.

He hath eat'n and lives;
And knows, and speaks, and reasons and discerns:
Irrational till then. Milton.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application. Harvey.

I shall quietly submit, not wishing so irrational a thing as that every body should be deceived. Pope.

IRRATIONA'LITY, îr-râsh-ô-nâl'ê-tê. n. s. [from irrational.] Want of reason.

IRRA'TIONALLY, îr-râsh'ô-nâl-ê. adv. [from irrational.] Without reason; absurdly.

IRRECLA'IMABLE, îr-rê-klâ'mâ-bl.[405] adj. [in and reclaimable.] Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.

As for obstinate, irreclaimable, professed enemies, we must expect their calumnies will continue. Addison.

IRRECONCI'LABLE, îr-rêk-ôn-sî'lâ-bl. adj. [irreconciliable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]

1. Not to be recalled to kindness; not to be appeased.

Wage eternal war,
Irreconcileable to our grand foe. Milton.

A weak unequal faction may animate a government; but when it grows equal in strength, and irreconcileable by animosity, it cannot end without some crisis. Temple.

2. Not to be made consistent: it has with or to.

There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you. Dryden.

As she was strictly virtuous herself, so she always put the best construction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcileable to the rules of honesty and decency. Arbuthnot.

Since the sense I oppose is attended with such gross irreconcileable absurdities, I presume I need not offer any thing farther in support of the one, or in disproof of the other. Rogers.

Thisessential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the atheists own doctrine of a chaos. Bentley.

All that can be transmitted from the stars is wholly unaccountable, and irreconcilable to any system of science. Bentley.

IRRECONCI'LABLENESS, îr-rêk-ôn-sî'lâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from irreconcilable.] Impossibility to be reconciled.

IRRECONCI'LABLY, îr-rêk-ôn-sî'lâ-blê. adv. [from irreconcilable.] In a manner not admitting reconciliation.

IRRECONCI'LED, îr-rêk'ôn-sîl'd. adj. [in and reconciled.] Not atoned.

A servant dies in many irreconciled iniquities. Shaksp.

IRRECO'VERABLE, îr-rê-kûv'ûr-â-bl. adj. [in and recoverable.]

1. Not to be regained; not to be restored or repaired.

Time, in a natural sense, is irrecoverable: the moment just fled by us, it is impossible to recall. Rogers.

2. Not to be remedied.

The irrecoverable loss of so many livings of principal value. Hooker.

It concerns every man, that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire. Tillotson.

IRRECO'VERABLY, îr-rê-kûv'ûr-â-blê. adv. [from irrecoverable.] Beyond recovery; past repair.

O dark, dark, dark amid' the blaze of noon;
Irrecov'rably dark, total eclipse,
Without all hope of day. Milton.

The credit of the exchequer is irrecoverably lost by the last breach with the bankers. Temple.

IRREDU'CIBLE, îr-rê-dû'sé-bl. adj. [in and reducible.] Not to be brought or reduced.

These observations seem to argue the corpuscles of air to be irreducible into water. Boyle.

IRREFRAGABI'LITY, îr-rêf-frâ-gâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [from irrefragable.] Strength of argument not to be refuted.

IRREFRA'GABLE, îr-rêf'frâ-gâ-bl, or, îr-rê-frâg'â-bl. adj. [irrefragabilis, school Latin; irrefragable, French.] Not to be confuted; superiour to argumental opposition.

Strong and irrefragable the evidences of christianity must be; they who resisted them would resist every thing. Atterbury.

The danger of introducing unexperienced men was urged as an irrefragable reason for working by slow degrees. Swift.

IRREFRA'GABLY, îr-rêf'frâ-gâ-blê. adv. [from irrefragable.] With force above confutation.

That they denied a future state is evident from St. Paul's reasonings, which are of no force but only on that supposition, as Origen largely and irrefragably proves. Atterbury.

IRREFU'TABLE, îr-rê-fû'tâ-bl.[517] adj. [irrefutabilis, Latin.] Not to be overthrown by argument.

IRRE'GULAR, îr-rêg'gû-lâr.[88] adj. [irregulier, French; irregularis, Latin.]

1. Deviating from rule, custom, or nature.

The am'rous youth
Obtain'd of Venus his desire,
Howe'er irregular his fire. Prior.

2. Immethodical; not confined to any certain rule or order.

This motion seems excentrique and irregular, yet not well to be resisted or quieted. K. Charles.

Regular
Then most, when most irregular they seem. Milton.

The numbers of pindariques are wild and irregular, and sometimes seem harsh and uncouth. Cowley.

3. Not being according to the laws of virtue. A soft word for vitious.

1. Deviation from rule.

2. Neglect of method and order.

This irregularity of its unruly and tumultuous motion might afford a beginning unto the common opinion. Brown.

As these vast heaps of mountains are thrown together with so much irregularity and confusion, they form a great variety of hollow bottoms. Addison.

3. Inordinate practice; vice.

Religion is somewhat less in danger of corruption while the sinner acknowledges the obligations of his duty, and is ashamed of his irregularities. Rogers.

IRRE'GULARLY, îr-rêg'gû-lâr-lê. adv. [from irregular.] Without observation of rule or method.

Phaeton,
By the wild courses of his fancy drawn,
From east to west irregularly hurl'd,
First set on fire himself, and then the world. Dryd.

Your's is a soul irregularly great,
Which wanting temper, yet abounds with heat. Dryden.

It may give some light to those whose concern for their little ones makes them so irregularly bold as to consult their own reason, in the education of their children, rather than to rely upon old custom. Locke.

To IRRE'GULATE, îr-rêg'gû-lâte. v. a. [from in and regula, Latin.] To make irregular; to disorder.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates. Brown.

IRRE'LATIVE, îr-rêl'lâ-tîv. adj. [in and relativus, Latin.] Having no reference to any thing; single; unconnected.

Separated by the voice of God, things in their species came out in uncommunicated varieties, and irrelative seminalities. Brown.

IRRELI'GION, îr-rê-lîd'jûn. n. s. [irreligion, French; in and religion.] Contempt of religion; impiety.

The weapons with which I combat irreligion are already consecrated. Dryden.

We behold every instance of prophaneness and irreligion, not only committed, but defended and gloried in. Rogers.

IRRELI'GIOUS, îr-rê-lîd'jûs.[314] adj. [irreligieux, French; in and religious.]

1. Contemning religion; impious.

The issue of an irreligious Moor. Shaksp.

Whoever sees these irreligious men,
With burthen of a sickness weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And vowing of their souls to ev'ry saint. Davies.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious. South.

2. Contrary to religion.

Wherein that scripture standeth not the church of God in any stead, or serveth nothing at all to direct, but may be let pass as needless to be consulted with, we judge it prophane, impious, and irreligious to think. Hooker.

Might not the queen's domesticks be obliged to avoid swearing, and irreligious prophane discourse? Swift.

IRRELI'GIOUSLY, îr-rê-lîd'jûs-lê. adv. [from irreligious.] With impiety; with irreligion.

IRRE'MEABLE, îr-rê'mê-â-bl. adj. [irremeabilis, Latin.] Admitting no return.

The keeper charm'd, the chief without delay
Pass'd on, and took th' irremeable way. Dryden.

IRREME'DIABLE, îr-rê-mê'dê-â-blê. adj. [irremediable, French; in and remediable.] Admitting no cure; not to be remedied.

They content themselves with that which was the irremediable error of former times, or the necessity of the present hath cast upon them. Hooker.

A steady hand in military affairs, is more requisite than in peace, because an error committed in war may prove irremediable. Bacon.

Whatever he consults you about, unless it lead to some fatal and irremediable mischief, be sure you advise only as a friend. Locke.

Irreme'diably, îr-rê-mê'dê-â-blê. adv. [from irremediable.] Without cure.

It happens to us irremediably and inevitably, that we may perceive these accidents are not the fruits of our labour, but gifts of God. Taylor.

Irremi'ssible, îr-rê-mîs'sê-bl. adj. [in and remitto, Latin; irremissible, French.] Not to be pardoned.

He is irremovable,
Resolv'd for flight. Shaksp.

Irreno'wned, îr-rê-nôûn'd'.[369] adj. [in and renown.] Void of honour. We now say, unrenowned.

For all he did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame
To sluggish sloth and sensual delights,
And end their days with irrenowned shame.
Fairy Queen.

Irre'parable, îr-rêp'pâ-râ-bl. adj. [irreparabilis, Latin; irreparable, French.] Not to be recovered; not to be repaired.

Irreparable is the loss, and patience says it is not past her cure. Shaksp.

Toil'd with loss irreparable. Milton.

It is an irreparable injustice we are guilty of, when we are prejudiced by the looks of those whom we do not know. Addison.

The story of Deucalion and Pyrrha teaches that piety and innocence cannot miss of the divine protection, and that the only loss irreparable is that of our probity. Garth.

Irre'parably, îr-rêp'pâ-râ-blê. adv. [from irreparable.] Without recovery; without amends.

Such adventures befall artists irreparably. Boyle.

The doctrine of irresistibility of grace, if it be acknowledged, there is nothing to be affixed to gratitude. Hammond.

Irresi'stible, îr-rê-zîs'tê-bl. adj. [irresistible, French; in and resistible.] Superiour to opposition.

Fear doth grow from an apprehension of the Deity, indued with irresistible power to hurt; and is of all affections, anger excepted, the unaptest to admit conference with reason. Hooker.

In mighty quadrate join'd
Of union irresistible. Milton.

Fear of God is inward acknowledgment of an holy just Being, armed with almighty and irresistible power. Tillotson.

There can be no difference in the subjects, where the application is almighty and irresistible, as in creation. Rogers.

Irresi'stibly, îr-rê-zîs'tê-blê. adv. [from irresistible.] In a manner not to be opposed.

God irresistibly sways all manner of events on earth. Dryden.

Fond of pleasing and endearing ourselves to those we esteem, we are irresistibly led into the same inclinations and aversions with them. Rogers.

Irresi'stless, îr-rê-zîst'lês. adj. [A barbarous ungrammatical conjunction of two negatives.] Irresistible; resistless.

Those radiant eyes, whose irresistless flame
Strikes envy dumb, and keeps sedition tame,
They can to gazing multitudes give law,
Convert the factious, and the rebel awe. Granville.

Irre soluble, îr-rêz'zô-lû-bl. adj. [in and resolubilis, Lat.] Not to be broken; not to be dissolved.

In factitious sal ammoniac the common and urinous salts are so well mingled, that both in the open fire and in subliming vessels they rise together as one salt, which seems in such vessels irresoluble by fire alone. Boyle.

Irre'solubleness, îr-rêz'zô-lû-bl-nês. n. s. [from irresoluble.] Resistance to separation of the parts.

Quercetanus has this confession of the irresolubleness of diamonds. Boyle.

Irreso'lvedly, îr-rê-zôl'vêd-lê. adv. [in and resolved.] Without settled determination.

Divers of my friends have thought it strange to hear me speak so irresolvedly concerning those things, which some take to be the elements, and others the principles of all mixed bodies. Boyle.

Irre'solute, îr-rêz'zô-lûte. adj. [irresolu, French; in and resolute.] Not constant in purpose; not determined.

Were he evil us'd, he would outgo
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose. Shaksp.

Him, after long debate, irresolute,
Of thoughts revolv'd his final sentence chose
Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
To enter. Milton.

To make reflections upon what is past, is the part of ingenuous but irresolute men. Temple.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide;
Irresolute on which she should rely,
At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

Irre'solutely, îr-rêz'zô-lûte-lê. adv. [from irresolute.] Without firmness of mind; without determined purpose.

Irresolu'tion, îr-rêz-ô-lû'shûn. n. s. [irresolution, French; in and resolution.] Want of firmness of mind.

It hath most force upon things that have the lightest motion, and therefore upon the spirits of men, and in them upon such affections as move lightest; as upon men in fear, or men in irresolution. Bacon.

Irresolution on the schemes of life which offer themselves to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison.

Irrespe'ctive, îr-rê-spêk'tîv. adj. [in and respective.] Having no regard to any circumstances.

Thus did the Jew, by persuading himself of his particular irrespective election, think it safe to run into all sins! Hammond.

According to this doctrine, it must be resolved wholly into the absolute irrespective will of God. Rogers.

Irrespe'ctively, îr-rê-spêk'tîv-lê. adv. [from irrespective.] Without regard to circumstances.

He is convinced, that all the promises belong to him absolutely and irrespectively. Hammond.

Irretrie'vable, îr-rê-trêê'vâ-bl.[275] adj. [in and retrieve.] Not to be repaired; irrecoverable; irreparable.

Irretrie'vably, îr-rê-trêê'vâ-blê. adv. [from irretrievable.] Irreparably; irrecoverably.

It would not defray the charge of the extraction, and therefore must have been all irretrievably lost, and useless to mankind, was it not by this means collected. Woodward.

Irre'verence, îr-rêv'vêr-ênse. n. s. [irreverentia, Latin; irreverence, French; in and reverence.]

1. Want of reverence; want of veneration; want of respect.

Having seen our scandalous irreverence towards God's worship in general, 'tis easy to make application to the several parts of it. Decay of Piety.

They were a sort of attributes, with which it was a matter of religion to salute them on all occasions, and which it was an irreverence to omit. Pope.

2. State of being disregarded.

The concurrence of the house of peers in that fury can be imputed to no one thing more than to the irreverence and scorn the judges were justly in, who had been always looked upon there as the oracles of the law. Clarendon.

Irre'verent, îr-rêv'vêr-ênt. adj. [irreverent, French; in and reverent.] Not paying due homage or reverence; not expressing or conceiving due veneration or respect.

As our fear excludeth not that boldness which becometh saints so, if our familiarity with God do not savour of fear, it draweth too near that irreverent confidence wherewith true humility can never stand. Hooker.

Knowledge men sought for, and covered it from the vulgar sort as jewels of inestimable price, fearing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious. Raleigh.

Witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark, who, for the shame
Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,
Servant of servants, on his vicious race. Milton.

Swearing, and the irreverent using the name of God in common discourse, is another abuse of the tongue. Ray.

If an irreverent expression or thought too wanton are crept into my verses, through my inadvertency, let their authors be answerable for them. Dryden.

Irre'verently, îr-rêv'vêr-ênt-lê. adv.

[from irreverent.] Without due respect or veneration.

'Tis but an ill essay of reverence and godly fear to use the gospel irreverently. Gov. of the Tongue.

IRREVE'RSIBLE, îr-rê-vêr'sê-bl. adj. [in and reverse.] Not to be recalled; not to be changed.

The sins of his chamber and his closet shall be produced before men and angels, and an eternal irreversible sentence be pronounced. Rogers.

IRREVE'RSIBLY, îr-rê-vêr'sê-blê. adv. [from irreversible.] Without change.

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrine of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church, at which so many myriads of solifidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond.

IRRE'VOCABLE, îr-rêv'vô-kâ-bl. adj. [irrevocabilis, Latin; irrevocable, French.] Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reversed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,
And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.
Shaksp.

Firm and irrevocable is my doom,
Which I have past upon her. Shaksp.

That which is past is gone and irrevocable, therefore they do but trifle that labour in past matters. Bacon.

The second, both for piety renown'd,
And puissant deeds, a promise shall receive
Irrevocable, that his regal throne
For ever shall endure. Milton.

By her irrevocable fate,
War shall the country waste, and change the state. Dryden.

The other victor flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood;
For ever lost, th' irrevocable light
Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night. Dryden.

Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,
And each irrevocable word is fate. Pope.

IRRE'VOCABLY, îr-rêv'vô-kâ-blê. adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recall.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the fire would be irrevocably extinguished. Boyle.

To I'RRIGATE, îr'rê-gâte. v. a. [irrigo, Latin.] To wet; to moisten; to water.

The heart, which is one of the principal parts of the body, doth continually irrigate, nourish, keep hot, and supple all the members. Ray.

They keep a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. A. Philips.

IRRIGA'TION, îr-rê-gâ'shûn. n. s. [from irrigate.] The act of watering or moistening.

Help of ground is by watering and irrigation. Bacon.

IRRI'GUOUS, îr-rîg'gû-ûs. adj. [from irrigate.]

1. Watery; watered.

The flow'ry lap
Of some irriguous valley spreads her store. Milton.

2. Dewy; moist. Philips seems to have mistaken the Latin phrase irriguus sopor.

Rash Elpenor
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep;
Imprudent! him death's iron sleep opprest. Philips

IRRI'SION, îr-rîzh'ûn. n. s. [irrisio, Latin irrision, French.] The act of laughing at another.

Ham, by his indiscreet and unnatural irrision, and exposing of his father, incurs his curse. Woodward.

To I'RRITATE, îr'rê-tâte.[91] v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, French.]

1. To provoke; to tease; to exasperate.

The earl, speaking to the freeholders in imperious language, did not irritate the people. Bacon.

Laud's power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superiour in the church, who having the reins in his hand, could slacken them, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his cholerick disposition. Clarendon.

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritateth them. Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate, to enforce.

Air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

When they are collected, the heat becometh more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat. Bacon.

Rous'd
By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson.

IRRITA'TION, îr-rê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritate.]

1. Provocation; exasperation.
2. Stimulation; vellication.

Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious. Arbuthnot.

IRRU'PTION, îr-rûp'shûn. n. s. [irruption, Fr. irruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance.

I refrain too suddenly
To utter what will come at last too soon;
Lest evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep. Milt.

There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea. Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholick blood into the heart puts a stop to its pulsation. Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled. Addison.

Is, îz.[420] [ıꝛ, Saxon. See To BE.]

1. The third person singular of To be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words. John.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good. Jer.

My thought, whose murther yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shaksp.

2. It is sometimes expressed by 's.

There 's some among you have beheld me fighting. Shaksp.

ISCHIA'DICK, îz-kê-â'dîk. adj. [ἰσχιον, ἰσχιαδικος; ischiadique, French.] In anatomy, an epithet to the crural vein; in pathology, the ischiadick passion is the gout in the hip, or the sciatica.

ISCHURE'TICK, îs-kû-rêt'tîk. n. s. [ischuretique, French; from ischury.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

I'SCHURY, îs'kû-rê.[353] n. s. [ἰσχυρία, ἰσχω and ουρον, urine; ischurie, French; ischuria, Latin.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISH, îsh. [ıꝛc, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality; as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.
2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Swedish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.
3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as, fool, foolish; man, manish; rogue, roguish.

I'SICLE, î'sîk-kl.[405] n. s. [more properly iceicicle, but should rather be written ise; ıꝛꝛ, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?
——The moon of Rome? chaste as the isicle
That 's curdled by the frost from purest snow
Hanging on Dian's temple. Shaksp.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for isicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLA'SS, î'zîng-glâs. n. s. [from ice, or ise, and glass; ichthyocolla, Latin.] A tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue.

The fish from which isinglass is prepared, is one of the cartilaginous kind: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. Hill.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incrassating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass. Floyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Mortimer.

I'SINGLASS Stone, î'zîng-glâs-stône. n. s. A fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. Hill.

I'SLAND, î'lând.[458] n. s. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; ealand, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shaksp.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Island of bliss! amid' the subject seas. Thomson.

I'SLANDER, î'lând-ûr.[98] n. s. [from island. Pronounced ilander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moons' men. Camden.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence. Shaksp.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and unhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boist'rous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE, île.[458] n. s. [isle, Fr. insula, Latin. Pronounced ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle. Shaksp.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, Fr. from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allée, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding isles and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy sits. Pope.

ISOPERIME'TRICAL, ì-sò-pêr-ê-mêt'trè-kâl. n. s. [ἴσος, περὶ, and μέτρον.] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISO'SCELES, ì-sôs'sè-lêz. n. s. [isoscele, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

I'SSUE, ìsh'shù.[457] n. s. [issue, Fr.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Psalms.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd
But to fine issues. Shaksp.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shaksp.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprize. Fairfax.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin, 'till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argalus alive under the pretence of having him publickly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden.

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shaksp.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wiseman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Matthew.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable!
Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst. Shaksp.

Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True Paradise, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton.

This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was bless'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryd.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. In law.

Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometimes for profits of lands or tenements; sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæstio juris; or to trial by the jury, if it be quæstio facti. Cowell.

To I'SSUE, ìsh'shù. v. n. [from the noun; isser, French; uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezekiel.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh.

Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton.

Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an irruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shaksp.

See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.

Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Strait issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altarages issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a strait concave again. Bacon.

To I'SSUE, ìsh'shù. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense. It is commonly followed by a particle, out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some noblemen published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryd.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe.

I'SSUELESS, ìsh'shù-lês. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew.

I have done sin;
For which the Heav'ns, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shaksp.

I'STHMUS, ìst'mûs. n. s. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnably fortified. Sandys.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stilling fleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT, ìt. pronoun. [hit, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requireth another word to be joined with him to show his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Addison.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?
——Even so
As with a man by his own alms impoison'd
And with his charity slain. Shaksp.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It 's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shaksp.

4. It is sometimes express'd by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length.
Hudibras.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the straights of Thermopylæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Spectator.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him.
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. Shaksp.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shaksp.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was 't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word
Macduff is fled to England. Shaksp.

City,
'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shaksp.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.

ITCH, ĭtsh.[362] n. s. [ɣicha, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised, as microscopes have discovered, by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains.
Shakspeare.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can'st not be healed. Deuteronomy.

As if divinity had catch'd
The itch on purpose to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin; which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue, for he thinks them knaves;
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH, ĭtsh. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wiseman.

My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shaksp.

Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shakspeare.

The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, gave fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.

I'TCHY, ĭtsh'ė. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

I'TEM, ī'tĕm. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

I'TEM, ī'tĕm. n. s.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakspeare.

2. A hint; an inuendo.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanville.

To I'TERATE, ĭt'tėr-ăte.[91] v. a. [itero, Latin.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone, to read them, as other parts of scripture he doth. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at a distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Ashes burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.

Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespass fear'd the more to sooth
Him with her lov'd society. Milton.

I'TERANT, ĭt'tėr-ânt. adj. [iterans, Latin.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon's Natural History.

ITERA'TION, ĭt-tėr-ā'shŭn. n. s. [iteration, Fr. iteratio, Lat.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration,
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shaksp.

My husband!
——Ay, 'twas he that told me first.
——My husband!
——What needs this iteration, woman?
I say thy husband. Shaksp.

Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon.

In all these respects, it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

ITI'NERANT, ĭ-tĭn'nĕr-ânt. adj. [itinerant, Fr.] Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Addison.

ITI'NERARY, ĭ-tĭn'nĕr-ār-ė. n. s. [itineraire; French; itinerarium, Lat.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison.

ITI'NERARY, ĭ-tĭn'nĕr-ār-ė. adj. [itineraire, French; itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it was rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon.

ITSE'LF, ĭt-sĕlf'. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses, to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there? Shaksp.

Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JU'BILANT, jû'bė-lânt. adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets list'ning stood,
While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milton.

JUBILA'TION, jû-bė-lā'shŭn. n. s. [jubilation, French; jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

JU'BILEE, jû'bė-lė. n. s. [jubilé, French; jubilum, from jubilo, low Latin.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung
With jubilee, and loud hosannas filled
Th' eternal regions. Milton.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing, the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing the jubilee of reason. South.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts. Dryden.

JUCU'NDITY, jû-kûn'dė-tė. n. s. [jucunditas, jucundus, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown.

JUDAS Tree, jû'dâs-trêė. n. s. [siliquastrum, Latin.] A plant.

Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the spring, and is increased by layers. Mortimer.

To JUDA'IZE, jû'dâ-ize. v. n. [judaiser, Fr. judaizo, low Lat.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with the Jews, was all to all. Sandys.

JUDGE, jûdje. n. s. [juge, French; judex, Latin.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? Genesis.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation. Psalms.

Thou art judge
Of all things made, and judgest only right. Milton.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shakspeare.

A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judge. Shakspeare.

How dares your pride,
As in a listed field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will sit judge himself. Sherlock.

A perfect judge will read each piece of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

To JUDGE, jûdje. v. n. [juger, French; judico, Latin.]

1. To pass sentence.

My wrong be upon thee: the Lord judge between thee and me. Genesis.

Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chron.

2. To form or give an opinion.

Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright. Shaksp.

Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they chuse. Milton.

If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil and which Ovid. Dryden.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.

How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Job.

Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor.

How properly the tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.

To JUDGE, jûdje. v. a.

1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.

Chaos shall judge the strife. Milton.

Then those, whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely. This is a sense seldom found but in the scriptures.

He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Psalms.

Judge not, that ye be not judged. Matthew.

Let no man judge you in meat or drink. Col.

JU'DGER, jûdje'ûr.[98] n. s. [from judge.] One who forms judgment, or passes sentence.

The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judgers of their judges. King Charles.

They who guide themselves merely by what appears, are ill judgers of what they have not well examined. Digby.

JU'DGMENT, jûdje'mênt. n. s. [jugement, French.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.

O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shaksp.

The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.

Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so this tree is high. Watts.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee. Shaksp.

3. The act of exercising judicature; judicatory.

They gave judgment upon him. 2 Kings.

When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison's Spectator.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanville.

We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burnet.

Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our enquiry. Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.

Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition. Dennis.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

I see men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward
Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shakspeare.

When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you. Shaksp.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With agony. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. Acts.

On Adam last his judgment he pronounc'd. Milton.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Romans.

The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation. Tillotson.

9. Punishment inflicted by Providence, with reference to some particular crime.

This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble,
Touches us not with pity. Shaksp.

We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison's Spectator.

10. Distribution of justice.

The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat. Acts.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shaksp.

In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own. Taylor.

A bold and wise petitioner goes straight to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch. Arbuthnot and Pope.

11. Judiciary law; statute.

If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant. Deuteronomy.

12. The last doom.

The dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be as was his sight. Shaksp.

JU'DICATORY, jû'dė-kâ-tûr-ė.[513] n. s. [judico, Latin.]

1. Distribution of justice.

No such crime appeared as the lords, the supreme court of judicatory, would judge worthy of death. Clarendon.

2. Court of justice.

Human judicatories give sentence on matters of right and wrong, but enquire not into bounty and beneficence. Atterbury.

JU'DICATURE, jû'dė-kâ-tûre. n. s. [judicature, French; judico, Latin.]

1. Power of distributing justice.

The honour of the judges in their judicature is the king's honour. Bacon.

If he should bargain for a place of judicature, let him be rejected with shame. Bacon.

2. Court of justice.

In judicatures to take away the trumpet, the scarlet, the attendance, makes justice naked as well as blind. South.

JUDI'CIAL, jû-dîsh'âl.[98] adj. [judicium, Latin.]

1. Practised in the distribution of publick justice.

What government can be without judicial proceedings? And what judicature without a religious oath? Bentley.

In reason, and is judicious. Milton.

To each savour meaning we apply,
And palate call judicious. Milton.

We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages for those discoveries they have left behind them. Locke.

JUDI'CIOUSLY, jû-dîsh'ûs-lê. adv. [from judicious.] Skilfully; wisely; with just determination.

So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular. Dryden.

Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs, to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence. Dryden.

JUG, jûg. n. s. [jugge, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.

You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts. Shakspeare.

He fetch'd 'em drink,
Fill'd a large jug up to the brink. Swift.

To JU'GGLE, jûg'gl. v. n. [jougler or jongler, Fr. joculari, Latin.]

1. To play tricks by slight of hand; to show false appearances of extraordinary performances.

The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests. Digby.

2. To practise artifice or imposture.

Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense. Shaksp.

Is 't possible that spells of France should juggle
Men into such strange mockeries? Shaksp.

They ne'er forswore themselves, nor lied,
Disdain'd to stay for friends consents;
Nor juggled about settlements. Hudibras.

JU'GGLE, jûg'gl.[405] n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A trick by legerdemain.
2. An imposture; a deception.

The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience. Tillotson.

JU'GGLER, jûg'gl-ûr.[98] n. s. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises slight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shaksp.

I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon.

Aristæus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Crœsus, and a notable juggler. Sandys.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The juggler which another's slight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know. Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison's Freeholder.

What magick makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main:
Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes? Swift.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him? Shaksp.

I sing no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

JU'GGLINGLY, jûg'gl-îng-lê.[410] adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.

JU'GULAR, jû'gû-lâr.[88] adj. [jugulum, Lat.] Belonging to the throat.

JUICE, jûse.[342] n. s. [jus, French; juys, Dutch.]

1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid. Watts.

Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain. Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. Ben Jonson's Discovery.

An animal whose juices are unsound can never be nourished: unsound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbuthnot.

JUI'CELESS, jûse'lês. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.

Divine Providence has spread her table every where; not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage, and nourishing grass. More.

When Boreas' spirit blusters sore,
Beware th' inclement heav'ns; now let thy hearth
Crackle with juiceless boughs. Philips.

JU'ICINESS, jû'sê-nês. n. s. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.

JU'ICY, jû'sê. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice; succulent.

Each plant and juciest gourd will pluck. Milton.

The musk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads its spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring. Philips.

To JUKE, jûke. v. n. [jucher, French.]

1. To perch upon any thing as birds.
2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and tossing of his head. L'Estrange.

JU'JUB, jû'jûb. } n. s. [zizyphus, Lat.]
JU'JUBES, jû'jûbz. } A plant whose flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose. The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone. Miller.

JU'LAP, jû'lâp.[88] n. s. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.] An extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serving for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone. Quincy.

Behold this cordial julap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt. Milton.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorificks and cordials expel the venom, and contemporate the heat and acrimony by julaps and emulsions. Wiseman.

JU'LUS, jû'lûs. n. s.

1. July flower.
2. Julus, ἰούλος, among botanists, denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called, in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c. Miller.

JU'LY, jû-lî'. n. s. [Julius, Latin; juillet, Fr.] The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March; named July in honour of Julius Cæsar; the seventh month from January.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sunburnt. Peacham.

JU'MART, jû'mârt. n. s. [French.]

Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.

To JU'MBLE, jûm'bl.[405] v. a. [in Chaucer jombre, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky mains make people wise;
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter. Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.

To JU'MBLE, jûm'bl. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JU'MBLE, jûm'bl. n. s. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Had the world been coagmented from the supposed fortuitous jumble this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.

JU'MENT, jû'mênt. n. s. [jument, French; jumentum, Latin.] Beast of burden.

Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching. Brown.

To JUMP, jûmp. v. n. [gumpen, Dutch.]

1. To leap; to skip; to move without step or sliding.

Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square. Shaksp.

The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen. Dryden.

So have I seen from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together,
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And swimming never wet a feather. Swift.

Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office. Gulliver.

2. To leap suddenly.

One Peregrinus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympick games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him. Collier.

We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. Spectator.

3. To jolt.

The noise of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nahum.

4. To agree; to tally; to join.

Do not embrace me till each circumstance

That I am Viola. Shaksp.

In some sort it jumps with my humour. Shaksp.

But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet. Shaksp.

Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barb'rous nations. Shaksp.

Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipsius. Hakewill.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras.

This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras.

Good wits jump, and mine the nimbler of the two. More.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine. Dryden.

I am happier for finding our judgments jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.

To JUMP, jůmp. v. a. To pass by a leap; to pass eagerly or carelessly over.

Here upon this bank and shelve of time,
We'd jump the life to come. Shaksp.

JUMP, jůmp. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.

Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well-doers. Hooker.

But since so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arrived. Shaksp.

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find
Soliciting his wife. Shaksp.

JUMP, jůmp. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip; a bound.

The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible. Locke.

The apostle would have no revelling or junketing. South.

JU'NTO, jůn'tò. n. s. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning and grace from morality? South

From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliver.

I'VORY, ì'vůr-ė.[166] n. s. [ivoire, French; ebur, Latin.] A hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour: it is the dens exertus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance. Hill.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakspeare.

Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacham.

From their ivory port the cherubim
Forth issued. Milton

Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd iv'ry this, that of transparent horn;
True visions through transaprent horn arise,
Through polish'd iv'ry pass deluding lies. Dryden

JUPPO'N, jůp-pôn'. n. s. [juppon, Fr.] A short close coat.

Some wore a breast-plate and a light juppon,
Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison. Dryden.

JURISDI'CTION, jů-rîs-dik'shůn. n. s. [jurisdictio, Latin; jurisdiction, French.]

1. Legal authority; extent of power.

Sometimes the practice of such jurisdiction may swerve through error even in the very best, and for other respects, where less integrity is. Hooker.

You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You maim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops. Shaksp

All persons exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction should have the king's arms in their seals of office. Hayward.

This place exempt
From Heav'n's high jurisdiction. Milton.

As Adam had no such power as gave him sovereign jurisdiction over mankind. Locke.

This custom in a popular state of impeaching particular men, may seem to be nothing else but the people's choosing to exercise their own jurisdiction in person. Swift.

2. District to which any authority extends.

JURISPRU'DENCE, jŭ-rĭs-prū'dĕnse. n. s. [jurisprudence, French; jurisprudentia, Latin.] The science of law.

JU'ROR, jū'rŭr.[186] n. s. [juro, Latin.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenser.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakspeare.

I sing no harm, good sooth, to any wight,
Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.

JU'RY, jū'rē. n. s. [jurata, Latin; juré, French.] A company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question.

There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errant, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assizes there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowell.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two
Guiltier than him they try. Shakspeare.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shaksp.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JU'RYMAN, jū'rē-măn.[88] n. s. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single juryman, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JU'RYMAST, jū'rē-mâst. n. s. It seems to be properly durée mast, mât de durée, a mast made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the missen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

JUST, jŭst. adj. [juste, French; justus, Latin.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.

Men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson.

2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just ephah. Leviticus.

3. I know not whether just of has any other authority.

Just of thy word, in ev'ry thought sincere,
Who knew no wish but what the world might hear. Pope.

4. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his sense close. Dryden.

These scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Granville.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heav'n. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.

Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain bard encount'ring on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts' Logick.

5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

How should man be just with God? Job.

A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Proverbs.

He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Matthew.

The just th' unjust to serve. Milton.

6. True; not forged.

Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.

7. Grounded on principles of justice; rightful.

Me thought just right
Did first create your leader. Milton.

8. Equally retributed.

He received a just recompense of reward. Hebr.

Whose damnation is just. Romans.

As Hesiod sings, spread water o'er thy fields,
And a most just and glad increase it yields. Denh.

9. Complete without superfluity or defect.

He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and straight limbed, but slender. Bacon.

10. Regular; orderly.

When all
The war shall stand rang'd in its just array,
And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addison.

11. Exactly proportioned.

The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship
To meet his grace, just distance 'tween our armies? Shakspeare.

12. Full; of full dimensions.

His soldiers had skirmishes with the Numidians, so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle. Knolles.

There is not any one particular above mentioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hale.

There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars. Dutchess of Newcastle.

JUST, jŭst. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hooker.

There, even just there he stood; and as she spoke,
Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryd.

A few understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.

The Nereids swam before
To smooth the seas; a soft etesian gale
But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryd.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryden.

3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.

Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST, jŭst. n. s. [jouste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament. Joust is more proper.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.

What news? hold those justs and triumphs? Shakspeare.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons ranged on either side,
Then turn'd their horses' heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryd.

To JUST, jŭst. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.
2. To push; to drive; to justle.

JU'STICE, jŭs'tĭs.[142] n. s. [justice, Fr. justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due; opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temp'rance, stableness,
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, he proved the justice of his claim.
3. Vindicative retribution; punishment: opposed to mercy.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut.
Let justice overtake us. Isaiah.

Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon.

4. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakspeare.

5. [justiciarius, Latin.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowell.

And thou, Esdras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdras.

6. JU'STICE of the King's Bench. [Justiciarius de Banquo Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowell.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

7. JU'STICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius, communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowell.

8. JU'STICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowell.

9. JU'STICES of Assise. [justiciarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that county to take assises; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowell.

10. JU'STICES in Eyre. [justiciarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in Eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowell.

11. JU'STICES of Gaol Delivery. [justiciarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprise those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assise were likewise authorized to this. Cowell.

12. JU'STICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assise; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day; nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius as well as justices of assise, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowell.

13. JU'STICES of Peace. [justiciarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowell.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakspeare.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakspeare.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JU'STICE, jŭs'tĭs. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. Not in use.

As for the title of proscription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justiced himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justiced by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JU'STICEMENT, jŭs'tĭs-mĕnt. n. s. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICER, jŭs'tĭs-ŭr. n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JU'STICESHIP, jŭs'tĭs-shĭp. n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JUSTI'CIABLE, jŭs-tĭsh'ĕ-ă-bl.[542] adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JU'STIFIABLE, jŭs'tĕ-fī-ă-bl.[405] adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton's Agonistes.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown.

JU'STIFIABLENESS, jŭs'tĕ-fī-ă-bl-nĕs. n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JU'STIFIABLY, jŭs'tĕ-fī-ă-blĕ. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICA'TION, jŭs-tĕ-fĕ-kā'shŭn. n. s. [justification, Fr. justificatio, low Lat.]

1. Absolution.

I hope for my brother's justification; he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakspeare.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness
To them by faith imputed, they may find
Justification towards God and peace
Of conscience. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICA'TOR, jûs-tê-fê-kâ'tûr. n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JU'STIFIER, jûs-tê-fi-ûr.[98] n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Romans.

To JU'STIFY, jûs'tê-fi.[183] v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor:
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakspeare.

They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Matthew.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment. Ecclus.

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act of wit of man will ever justify them. Sherlock.

You're neither justified nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milton.

My unwilling flight the gods inforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.

Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryden.

Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts.

To JU'STLE, jûs'sl.[405 472] v. n. [from just, jouster, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance
Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakspeare.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Nahum.

Argo pass'd
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Tine the slant lightning. Milton's Par. Lost.

Not one starry spark,
But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers, therefore justle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And in the dark men justle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles justled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be staid; then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings and clashings in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To justle here among a croud. Swift.

To JU'STLE, jûs'sl.[405] v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The surly commons shall respect deny,
And justle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post. Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Addison.

JU'STLY, jûst'lê. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.

Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open sight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword
Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryden.

The goddess, studious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,
Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS, jûst'nês. n. s. [from just.]

1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made. Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it. Shak.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison.

To JUT, jût. v. n. [Supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot.] To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shakspeare.

All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders. Wotton.

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutted to the sea. Dryden.

Broke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome.

To JU'TTY, jût'tê. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shaksp.

JU'VENILE, jû'vê-nîl.[140] adj. [juvenilis, Latin.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays.

JUVENI'LITY, jû-vê-nîl'ê-tê. n. s. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulness.

The restauration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

2. Light and careless manner.

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JU'XTAPOSITION, jûks-tâ-pô-zîsh'ûn. n. s. [juxtaposition, Fr. juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville.

I'VY, î'vê. n. s. [ɪfiʒ, Saxon; hedera, Latin.] A plant.

Ivy is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;
A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh.

Direct the clasping ivy where to climb. Milton.

JY'MOLD, jîm'ôld. adj. See GIMAL.

Their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;
And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless. Shakspeare.

K.

K. kå. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words; as knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shook, leek. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KA'LENDAR, kål'ên-dûr.[98] n. s. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour
Stand as accursed in the kalendar. Shakspeare.

KA'LI, kå'lê. n. s. [an Arabick word.] Sea weed, of the ashes of which glass is made; whence the word alkali.

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KAM, kåm. adj. Crooked.

Kam, in Erse, is squint eyed, and applied to any thing awry; clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, cross from the purpose: A-schembo, Italian; hence our English a-kimbo.

Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam.

This is clean kam; merely awry. Shakspeare.

To KAW, kåw. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nest, set all their young ones a gaping; but having nothing in their mouths but air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke.

KAW, kåw. n. s. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven-kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

KAYLE, kåle. n. s. [quille, French.]

1. Ninepin: kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

And now at keels they try a harmless chance,
And now their kur they teach to fetch and dance.
Sidney.

The residue of their time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carew.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in threes are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

To KECK, kêk. v. n. [kecken, Dutch.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon's Natural History.

The faction, is it not notorious,
Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift.

To KE'CKLE, kêk'kl. v. a. To defend a cable round with rope. Ainsworth.

KE'CKSY, kêk'sê. n. s. [commonly kex; cigue, French; cicuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksy or kex the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow-jointed plant.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shaksp.

KE'CKY, kêk'kê. adj. [from kex.] Resembling a kex.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

To KEDGE, kêdje. v. a. [kaghe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the foresail, or foretopsail and mizen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harris.

KE'DGER, kêd'jûr. n. s. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

KE'DLACK, kêd'lâk. n. s. A weed that grows among corn; charnock. Tusser.

KEE, kêê. The provincial plural of cow, properly kine.

A lass that Cic'ly hight had won his heart,
Cic'ly the western lass that tends the kee. Gay.

KEEL, kêêl.[246] n. s. [cœle, Saxon; kiel, Dutch; quille, French.] The bottom of a ship.

Portunus
Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,
And steer'd the sacred vessel. Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her; her tail she useth as her rudder. Grew.

Your cables burst, and you must quickly feel
The waves impetuous ent'ring at your keel. Swift.

KEELS, kêêlz, the same with kayles; which see.

To KEEL, kêêl. v. n. [cælan, Sax.] This word, which is preserved in Shakspeare, Hanmer explains thus:

To keel seems to mean to drink so deep, as to turn up the bottom of the pot, like turning up the keel of a ship. Hanmer.

In Ireland, to keel the pot is to scum it.

While greasy Joan doth keel the pot. Shaksp.

KE'ELFAT, kêêl'vât. n. s. [cœlan, Saxon, to cool, and fat, or vat, a vessel.] Cooler; a tub in which liquor is let to cool.

KE'ELSON, kêêl'sûn. n. s. The next piece of timber in a ship to her keel, lying right over it next above the floor timber. Harris.

To KE'ELHALE, kêêl'hâle. v. a. [keel and hale.] To punish in the seaman's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other.

KEEN, kêên.[246] adj. [cene, Saxon; kuhn, German; koen, Dutch.]

1. Sharp; well edged; not blunt. We say keen of an edge; and sharp, either of edge or point.

Come, thick night,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes.
Shakspeare.

Here is my keen-edged sword,
Deck'd with fine flower-de-luces on each side.
Shakspeare.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms. Dryden.

A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field. Dryd.

2. Severe; piercing.

The winds
Blow moist and keen, shattering the graceful locks
Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek
Some better shroud. Milton.

The cold was very supportable; but as it changed to the north-west, or north, it became excessively keen. Ellis' Voyage.

3. Eager; vehement.

Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man. Shaksp.

Keen dispatch of real hunger. Milton.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up a piece of the coat. L'Estrange.

Those curs are so extremely hungry, that they are too keen at the sport, and worry their game. Tatler.

This was a prospect so very inviting, that it could not be easily withstood by any who have so keen an appetite for wealth. Swift.

4. Acrimonious; bitter of mind.

Good father cardinal, cry thou, amen,
To my keen curses. Shaksp.

Ki'ller, kĭl'lûr. n. s. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.

What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Amphialus, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son? Sidney.

Wilt thou for the old lion hunt, or fill
His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,
When couch'd in dreadful dens? Sandys.

So rude a time,
When love was held so capital a crime,
That a crown'd head could not compassion find,
But dy'd, because the killer had been kind. Waller.

Ki'llow, kĭl'lō.[327] n. s. [This seems a corruption of coal and low, a flame, as soot is thereby produced.] An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doubtless had its name from kollow, by which name, in the north, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Woodward.

KILN, kĭl.[411] n. s. [cylN, Saxon.] A stove; a fabric formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

I'll creep up into the chimney.—There they always use to discharge their birding pieces: creep into the kiln hole. Shaksp.

After the putting forth in sprouts, and the drying upon the kiln, there will be gained a bushel in eight of malt. Bacon.

Physicians chuse lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slacked. Moxon.

To Ki'lndry, kĭl'drĭ. v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kiln.

The best way is to kilndry them. Mortimer.

Kilt, kĭlt. for killed. Spenser.

Ki'mbo, kĭm'bō. ad. [a schembo, Italian.] Crooked; bent; arched.

The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carv'd,
And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden.

He observed them edging towards one another to whisper: so that John was forced to sit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder. Arbuthnot.

Kin, kĭn. n. s. [cynne, Saxon.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their errours. Bacon.

Th' unhappy Palamon,
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,
Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars,
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound. Shakspeare.

The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborne by fury of the tide. Dryden.

3. A relation; one related.

Then is the soul from God; so pagans say,
Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind:
Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray,
A citizen of heaven, to earth confin'd. Davies.

4. The same generical class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

The burst
And the ear-deaf'ning voice of the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense,
That I was nothing. Shaksp.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other alcalizate salts. Boyle.

5. A diminutive termination; from kind, a child, Dutch: as, manikin, minikin, thomkin, wilkin.

KIND, kynd.[160] adj. [from cynne, relation, Saxon.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general good-will.

By the kind gods 'tis most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard. Shaksp.

Some of the ancients, like kind hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South.

2. Favourable; beneficient.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Luke.

Kind, kynd. n. s. [cynne, Saxon.]

1. Race; generical class. Kind in Teutonick English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hooker.

As when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wing,
Came summon'd over Eden, to receive
Their names of thee. Milton.

That both are animalia,
I grant; but not rationalia;
For though they do agree in kind,
Specifick difference we find. Hudibras.

God and Nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but kinds and companies. South.

He with his wife were only left behind
Of perish'd man; they two were human kind. Dryd.

Some acts of virtue are common to heathens and christians; but I suppose them to be performed by christians after a more sublime manner than among the heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Atterbury.

He, with a hundred hearts refin'd,
Shall stretch thy conquest over half the kind. Pope.

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found to have so many. Baker.

3. Natural state.

He did give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them. Bacon.

The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decumæ, or tithes. Arbuth.

4. Nature; natural determination.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shaksp.

Some of you on pure instinct of nature;
Are led by kind t' admire your fellow-creature. Dryden.

5. Manner; way.

Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. Shaksp.

This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind, than take five in the hundred. Bacon.

6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.

Diogenes was asked in a kind of scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers; He answered, Because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not. Bacon.

To Ki'ndle, kĭn'dl. v. a. [cinnu, Welsh; cyndelan, Saxon.]

1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea he kindleth it and baketh bread. Isaiah.

I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some men's distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. King Charles.

If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force, and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. South.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.

I 've been to you a true and humble wife;
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike. Shakspeare.

He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Job.

Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
'Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Daniel.

Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd
To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind. Dryden.

To Ki'ndle, kĭn'dl.[405] v. n.

1. To catch fire.

When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Isaiah.

2. [from cennan, Saxon.] To bring forth. It is used of some particular animals.

Are you native of this place?
—As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled. Shakspeare.

Ki'ndler, kĭnd'dl-ûr.[98] n. s. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.

Now is the time that rakes their revels keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep. Gay.

Ki'ndly, kynd'lè. adv. [from kind.] Benevolently; favourably; with good-will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Shakspeare.

I sometime lay here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly. Shaksp.

Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Romans.

His grief some pity, others blame;
The fatal cause all kindly seek. Prior.

Who with less designing ends,
Kindlier entertain their friends,
With good words, and count'nance sprightly,
Strive to treat them all politely. Swift.

Ki'ndly, kynd'lè. adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]

1. Homogeneal; congeneal; kindred; of the same nature.

This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby. Hammond.

These soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
Of various influence, foment and warm,
Temper or nourish. Milton.

2. The foregoing sense seems to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

3. Bland; mild; softening.

Through all the living regions do'st thou move,
And scatter'st, where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love. Dryden.

Ye heav'ns from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r. Pope.

KI'NDNESS, kyind'nês. n. s. [from kind.] Benevolence; beneficence; good-will; favour; love.

If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men. Ecclesiasticus.

Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people. Collier.

Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers.

KI'NDRED, kĭn'drêd. n. s. [from kind; cynnene, Saxon.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dryden.

2. Relation; suit.

An old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakspeare.

3. Relatives.

I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred. Shakspeare.

Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.

KI'NDRED, kĭn'drêd. adj. Congenial; related; cognate.

From Tuscan Coritum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god. Dryden.

KINE, kyine. n. s. plur. from cow.

To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eyne. Ben Jonson.

A field I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine. Gay.

KING, kĭng. n. s. [A contraction of the Teutonick word cuning, or cyning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Verstegan.]

1. Monarch; supreme governour.

The great King of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder. Shakspeare.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shaksp.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakspeare.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temp'rance, stableness,
Bounty, persev'rance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shaksp.

Thus states were form'd, the name of king unknown,
'Till common int'rest plac'd the sway in one:
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a sire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope.

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon.

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen. Pope.

4. KING at arms, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarencieux. Phillips.

A letter under his own hand was lately shewed me by sir William Dugdale, king at arms. Walton.

To KING, kĭng. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather ludicrous.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fears attend her not. Shaksp.

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.

Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again. Shakspeare.

KI'NGAPPLE, kĭng'ăp-pl. n. s. A kind of apple.

The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting. Mortimer.

KI'NGCRAFT, kĭng'krăft. n. s. [king and craft.] The art of governing. A word commonly used by king James.

KI'NGCUP, kĭng'kŭp. n. s. [king and cup.] The name is properly, according to Gerard, kingcob.] A flower; crowfoot.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green, and upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peacham.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.

KI'NGDOM, kĭng'dŭm.[166] n. s. [from king.]

1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

You're welcome,
Most learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom. Shakspeare.

Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan. Numbers.

2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.

The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.

3. A region; a tract.

The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakspeare.

KI'NGFISHER, kĭng'fĭsh-ûr. n. s. [halcyon.] A species of bird.

When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bestows, kingfishers play on shore. May.

KI'NGLIKE, kĭng'like. } adj. [from king.]
KI'NGLY, kĭng'lê. }

1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.

There we'll sit
Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shakspeare.

Yet this place
Hath been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come
To rev'rence thee. Dryden.

In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.

Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-case to a common 'larum bell? Shaksp

Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command. Shak.

3. Noble; august; magnificent.

He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes. Sidney.

I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts. Shakspeare.

KI'NGLY, kĭng'lê. adv. With an air of royalty; with superiour dignity.

Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state
Inclin'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His hat which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with rev'rence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Dunciad.

KINGSE'VIL, kĭngz-ê'v'l. n. s. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of a king.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands have bestowed them amongst their kinsfolks Spenser.

My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job

KI'NSMAN, kînz'mân.[88] n. s. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd.
Dryden.

Let me stand excluded from my right,
Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd in fight. Dryden's Fables.

There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.

KI'NSWOMAN, kînz'wûm-ûn. n. s. [kin and woman.] A female relation.

A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis' Letters.

KIRK, kêrk. n. s. [cyrce, Saxon; κυριακη.] A church. An old word yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to dight,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds and sweet eglantine. Spenser.

Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots.
Cleaveland.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. K. Charles.

KI'RTLE, kêr'tl.[105] n. s. [cyrcel, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.

All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.

What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakspeare.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.

To KISS, kîs. v. a. [cusan, Welsh; κυω.]

1. To touch with the lips.

But who those ruddy lips can miss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.

He took
The bride about the neck, and kist her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shakspeare.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shak.

2. To treat with fondness.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it, but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shaksp.

3. To touch gently.

The moon shines bright; in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakspeare.

KISS, kîs. n. s. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours of lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shaks.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

KI'SSER, kîs'sûr.[98] n. s. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

KI'SSINGCRUST, kîs'sing-krûst. n. s. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one-loaf in the oven touches another.

These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer. King.

KIT, kît. n. s. [kitte, Dutch.]

1. A large bottle. Skinner.
2. A small diminutive fiddle.

'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing-master's kit. Grew.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.

KI'TCHEN, kîtsh'în.[103] n. s. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cycene, Saxon; cuisine, Fr. cusina, Italian; kyshen, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge at a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heav'n, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

KI'TCHENGARDEN, kîtsh'în-gâr-d'n. n. s. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchen-gardens. Bacon.

A kitchen-garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Spectator.

KI'TCHENMAID, kîtsh'în-mâde. n. s. [kitchen and maid.] A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

KI'TCHENSTUFF, kîtsh'în-stûf. n. s. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer.
Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel-preaching ministry. Hudibras.

KI'TCHENWENCH, kîtsh'în-wênsh. n. s. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.

KITE, kyîte.[160] n. s. [cyga, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shaksp.

The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.

Detested kite! thou liest. Shakspeare.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Gov. of the Tongue.

KI'TESFOOT, kyîts'fût. n. s. A plant. Ainsworth.

KI'TTEN, kît't'n.[103] n. s. [katteken, Dutch. It is probable that the true singular is kit, the dimunitive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.] A young cat.

That a mare will sooner drown than a horse, is not experienced: nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown.

It was scratched in playing with a kitten.
Wiseman.

Helen was just slipt into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KI'TTEN, kît't'n. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born.
Shakspeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it.
L'Estrange.

To KLICK, klîk. v. n. [from clack.]

1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch.

To KNAB, nâb.[399] v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so that knab and knap may be the same.

I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.

An ass was wishing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

To KNA'BBLE, nâb'bl. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.

Horses will knabble at walls, and rats knaw iron.
Brown.

KNACK, nâk.[399] n. s. [cnapinge, skill, Saxon.]

1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

When I was young, I was wont
To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd
The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakspeare.

For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou dost but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success.
Shakspeare.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lew'd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shaksp.

But is 't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.

The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address. L'Estrange.

Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryd.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.

For how should equal colours do the knack?
Cameleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK, nåk.[399] v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.

KNA'CKER, nåk'kůr. n. s. [from knack.]

1. A maker of small work.

One part for plow-right, knacker and smith. Mortimer.

2. A ropemaker. [restio, Latin.] Ainsw.

KNAG, någ. n. s. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retained in Scotland.] A hard knot in wood.

KNA'GGY, någ'gė. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; set with hard rough knots.

KNAP, nåp.[399] n. s. [cnaſ, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnæp, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.

You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs. Bacon.

To KNAP, nåp. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.

He knappeth the spear in sunder. Com. Prayer.

He will knap the spears a-pieces with his teeth. More.

2. [knaap, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.

Knap a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon's Natural History.

To KNAP, nåp. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knap in before they knew they were out. Wiseman.

KNA'PBOTTLE, nåp'bŏt-tl. n. s. [papaver spumeum.] A plant.

To KNA'PPLE, nåp'pl.[405] v. n. [from knap.] To break off with a sharp quick noise.

KNA'PSACK, nåp'såk. n. s. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in summer, and barns in winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNA'PWEED, nåp-wēēd. n. s. [jacea, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

KNARE, nâre.[399] n. s. [knor, German.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly stubs instead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old,
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNAVE, nâve.[399] n. s. [cnapa, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.

2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting sight,
Yet hath sir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praises have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves,
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools: knave, in the mean time passing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.

See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn to t' account,
If we are brought in play upon 't,
Or but by casting knaves get in,
What power can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNA'VERY, nâ'vůr-ė.[557] n. s. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villainy.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Shakspeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakspeare.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too,
Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
Like Æsop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps of trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best.
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry. Shakspeare.

KNA'VISH, nâ'vîsh. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knavish to do it from friends. Pope.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here she comes curst and sad;
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad. Shakspeare.

KNA'VISHLY, nâ'vîsh-lė. adv. [from knavish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously.

To KNEAD, nēēd.[227] v. a. [cnædan, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here 's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakspeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be;
Wisdom makes him an ark, where all agree. Donne.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryd.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison.

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior

The cake she kneaded was the sav'ry meat. Prior.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH, nēēd'ing-trŏf. n. s. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exodus.

KNEE, nēē.[399] n. s. [cneop, Sax. knee, Dutch.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspeare.

Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton.

Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,
Io lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE, nēē. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down, and knee the way into his mercy. Shakspeare.

Return with her!
Why, the hot blooded France that dow'rless took
Our youngest born: I could as well be brought
To knee his throne, and squire-like pension beg. Shakspeare.

KNEED, nēēd. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as, in-kneed, or out-kneed.

2. Having joints: as, kneed grass.

KNE'EDEEP, nēē'dēēp. adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Rising to the knees.

2. Sunk to the knees.

The country peasant meditates no harm,
When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm;
In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almost kneedeep through mire in clumsey shoes. Dryden.

KNE'EDGRASS, nēēd'grâs. n. s. [gramen geniculatum.] An herb.

KNE'EHOLM, nēē'hōme. n. s. [aquifolium.] An herb. Ainsworth.

KNE'EPAN, nēē'pân. n. s. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its foreside. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pully. Quincy.

The kneepan must be shewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint. Peacham.

To KNEEL, nēēl.[399] v. n. [from knee.] To peform the act of genuflexion; to bend the knee.

When thou do'st ask me blessing, I'll kneel down
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shaksp.

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his mistress, salutation. Shaksp.

A certain man kneeling down to him, said, Lord, have mercy upon my son; for he is lunatick. Matt.

As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Taylor.

KNE'ETRIBUTE, nēē'trĭb-ūte. n. s. [knee and tribute.] Genuflexion; worship or obeisance shown by kneeling.

Receive from us
Kneetribute yet unpaid, prostration vile. Milton.

KNEL, nĕl.[399] n. s. [cnil, Welsh, a funeral pile; cnyllan, to ring, Sax.] The sound of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And so his knell is knoll'd. Shaksp.

Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shaksp.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shaksp.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
The am'rous youth around her bow'd;
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I saw, and kiss'd her in her shrowd. Prior.

KNEW, nū.[399] The preterit of know.

KNIFE, nīfe.[399] n. s. plur. knives. [cnif, Sax. kniff, Danish.] An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes.
Shakspeare.

Blest powers, forbid thy tender life,
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

KNIGHT, nīte.[399] n. s. [cniht, Saxon; knecht, Germ. a servant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shaksp.

This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,
To give impiety to this rev'rent stile?
Daniel's Civil War.

No squire with knight did better fit,
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Shakspeare uses it of a female; and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shaksp.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT errant, nīte-ĕr'rănt. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim
Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT errantry, nīte-ĕr'rănt-rē. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the post, nīte. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping post, or pillory.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the shire, nīte. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a-year is qualified.

To KNIGHT, nīte. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNI'GHTLY, nīte'lē. adv. [from knight.] Befitting a knight; beseeming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How dares your pride presume against my laws:
As in a listed field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

KNI'GHTHOOD, nīte'hŭd. n. s. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that is noursling, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart. F. Queen.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour.
Shakspeare.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in? B. Jonson.

If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.

KNI'GHTLESS, nīte'lĕs. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou cursed miscreant,
That hast with knightless guile, and treacherous train,
Fair knighthood foully shamed. Fairy Queen.

To KNIT, nĭt.[399] v. a. pret. knit or knitted. [cnittan, Saxon.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.

Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
The birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shaksp.

A thousand Cupids in those curls do sit;
Those curious nets thy slender fingers knit. Waller.

2. To tie.

Send for the county; go tell him of this;
I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.
Shakspeare.

3. To join; to unite. This was formerly a word of extensive use; it is now less frequent.

His gall did grate for grief and high disdain,
And knitting all his force, got one hand free.
Spenser.

These, mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they are in my power. Shak.

O let the vile world end,
And the premised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shaksp.

Lay your highness'
Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with the most indissoluble tye
For ever knit. Shaksp.

This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league. Shaksp.

By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knitteth souls, and prospers loves.
Shakspeare.

If ye become peaceably, mine heart shall be knit unto you. 1 Chron.

That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love. Colossians.

He doth fundamentally and mathematically demonstrate the firmest knittings of the upper timbers, which make the roof. Wotton.

Pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit. Ben Jonson.

Ye knit my heart to you by asking this question. Bacon.

These two princes were agreeable to be joined in marriage, and thereby knit both realms into one. Hayward.

Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastic round. Milton.

God gave several abilities to several persons, that each might help to supply the public needs, and by joining to fill up all wants, they be knit together by justice, as the parts of the world are by nature. Taylor.

Nature cannot knit the bones, while the parts are under a discharge. Wiseman.

4. To contract.

What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,
And turn thy eyes so coldly on thy prince. Addison.

5. To tie up.

He saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth Acts.

To KNIT, nĭt.[399] v. n.

1. To weave without a loom.

A young shepherdess knitting and singing: her voice comforted her hands to work, and her hands kept time to her voice's musick. Sidney.

Make the world distinguish Julia's son,
From the vile offspring of a trull, that sits
By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryd.

2. To join; to close; to unite. Not used.

Our sever'd navy too
Have knit again; and float, threat'ning most sea-like. Shaksp.

Knit, nĭt. n. s. [from the verb.] Texture.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shakspeare.

Knit'ter, nĭt'tûr.[98] n. s. [from knit.] One who weaves or knits.

The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the three maids that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it. Shaksp.

Knit'tingneedle, nĭt'tĭng-nêê-dl. n. s. [knit and needle.] A wire which women use in knitting.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, she would prick him with her knittingneedle. Arbuthnot.

1. A complication of a cord or string not easily to be disentangled.

He found that reason's self now reasons found
To fasten knots, which fancy first had bound. Sidney.

As the fair vestal to the fountain came,
Let none be startled at a vestal's name.
Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather'd in a knot her flowing hair. Addison.

2. Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.

Garden knots, the frets of houses, and all equal figures, please: whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.

Our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakspeare's Richard II.

It fed flow'rs worthy of paradise, which not nice art
In beds and curious knots, but nature boon,
Pour'd forth profuse on hill and dale and plain. Milton.

Their quarters are contrived into elegant knots, adorned with the most beautiful flowers. More.

Henry in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half-cxpress'd, and half-conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Prior.

3. Any bond of association or union.

Confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona. Shakspeare.

Richmond aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And by that knot looks proudly on the crown. Shakspeare.
